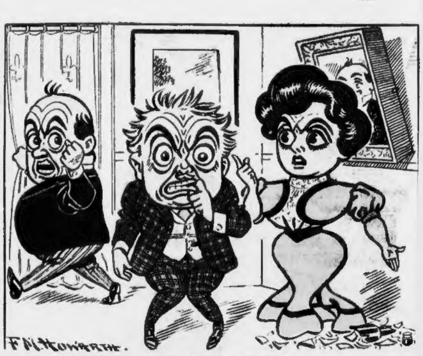
LEANDER: "Ye gods! Now I AM up against it."



6. POPPER: "Oh, ye toper, ye wine bibber, ye tippler! I go! I'll never darken your doors again! And to hide it behind MY picture, too! Oh, it makes my blood boil!"
LULU: "Oh, Leander, just see what you have done! Never again, as long as you live, bring a bottle of liquor into this house. There, now!"

"Oh, Mamma Dear, Oh, Papa! It's Me—Your Little Rosebud"

How the Gypsies Stole Little Rosie Adam, Darkened Her Hair with the Juice of Herbs While Sun and Wind Browned Her Skin, Taught Her to Tell Fortunes and Sold Her from One Tribe to Another---and How Her Father and Mother, Turning Gypsies Themselves, Followed Clear from Chicago to Salem, Mass., and Rescued Her at Last.

Little "Rosebud" When She Was Six Years Old.

"LITTLE ROSEBUD" AS HER FATHER FIRST SAW HER IN THE GYPSY CAMP.

Whoever believes that such stories are myths, invented to terrify refractory little ones at bedtime, need only to turn to this page and read the affecting statement of little Rosie Adam, of Chicago, who, after more than a year in slavery in different bands of these nomads, has been restored to her parents at Salem, Mass.

They should bear in mind also that but for the devotion of her parents, which impelled them to leave their home and become voluntary gypsies, attaching themselves first to one tribe and then to another, probably little Rosie would never have escaped from the captors who profited by her toil, and who sold her into bondage in other camps, when so disposed, like any chattel.

In September of last year there was no happier, though humble, home circle in Chicago than that of which John Adam, an honest and hard-working mechanic, was the head. Only a few years before he had come from Russia with his wife and infant daughter, Rosie.

As no more children had been born to them, Rosie was their idol. The father saved money out of his wages, and they bought a little home in the outskirts of the city. Rosie was sent to the public school a few blocks distant, and at eleven years old gladdened her parents' hearts by signs that she was developing into a genuine little American.

Then, one day at the beginning of November Rosie failed to return from school at the usual hour. When Adam returned from his work at supper time he found his wife weeping and heart-broken. Their little Rosie had not come home. Her mother had gone to the school house and learned only that Rosie had been dismissed with the other children.

All that night, and for many days and nights afterward, Adam searched vainly for his lost daughter. The most he could learn was that a little girl answering to Rosie's description had been seen walking along Michigan Boulevard toward the Union Railway station with a swarthy-complexioned woman and carrying a bundle.

During the Summer there had been a camp of gypsies in a vacant lot not far from the Adam home. Both Adam and his wife had seen bands of wandering gypsies in Russia. They were among those simple-minded folk who really believed that gypsies sometimes stole and carried off white children.

"God's will be done," said Adam to his wife. "We also will become gypsies, for only in that way can we hope to get news of our little one."

Eagerly the wife assented. They sold everything they possessed but their little home, arrayed themselves in gypsy garb, boarded a train on the same road by which the father believed Rosie and her woman captor had travelled eastward from Chicago and got off at a small town in Indiana, where Adam had learned there was a gypsy camp.

Adam was a stout fellow, familiar with horses, wagons and harness, and the gypsies welcomed him and his wife into their tribe. They did not dare make any inquiries about their lost daughter, merely keeping their eyes open and their ears ready to profit by idle gossip which might offer a clue to the missing child's whereabouts.

Looked Like Real Gypsies.

Becoming a skilful horse trader Adam gained the esteem of his gypsy comrades. His mechanical skill made him very useful in repairing their harness and wagons. It also furnished him with an excuse to transfer his services to other bands when they were especially needed. In this way, without creating suspicion, the father and mother worked their way into Ohio and to Detroit.

Mrs. Adam, by her ready and capable services, gained the good will of the gypsy women wherever husband and wife camped, and so was not excluded from the circle of tribal gossip. In this way she learned that she and her husband were only a few weeks behind an eastward travelling band which had recently purchased from another band a little white girl who had become prosperously expert at telling fortunes.

Adam and his wife believed this to be their daughter. They grasped every opportunity to work their way eastward. In the Winter time this was slow work, for then most gypsy camps remain stationary in some favorable location, waiting for Spring and good roads.

It was May before they had crossed the Alleghanies. By that time no one would have known that Adam and his wife were not real gypsies. Their hands and faces were blackened by weather and the smoky atmosphere of Winter camps. Mrs. Adam's hair, which had been flaxen, like little Rosie's, had been darkened at the beginning of her travels with a decoction of herbs.

In the gossip she overheard from time to time the stolen child was always spoken of as dark-haired, and the mother had no doubt that little Rosie's hair, eyebrows and eyelashes had been similarly treated by her gypsy captors. So the father and mother had never wasted time looking for a child with their Rosie's flaxen locks.

It was not until nearly a year from the time they started on their travels that Adam and his wife reached the lowlands of New Jersey and joined a camp of gypsies not far from Trenton. Then they became almost certain of little Rosie's whereabouts.

They learned that a little girl captive had been sold for $200 to the famous chief of the New England tribe, John Croix. This news gave them grave apprehensions, for the reputation of John Croix for cruelty and greed had become well known to them.

"Husband, we must hurry," said Mrs. Adam. "I feel that we are drawing near to our little daughter and that her lot is harder than ever."

As soon as possible they had themselves transferred to a New England-bound band which had need of Adam's ready hands with wagons and harness. Then they crossed the Hudson by the Fort Lee ferry, journeyed through Westchester County, N. Y., into Connecticut, into Massachusetts and to the outskirts of Boston, where the band rested for a week. It was then late in October.

"Husband, we must hurry; I seem to hear our little one calling to us," said the wife every day. The long strain was telling on them both. It was torture for them while the band rested.

It was here they learned that John Croix and his tribe had decided to Winter on a farm near Salem, Mass. Hearing this the band of which Adam and his wife were members broke camp, its leaders thinking that the neighborhood of Salem might be a good wintering place for them, too.

Two days brought them within sight of the camp of John Croix, and they pitched their tents for the night.

"If only I could see that her eyes are blue," thought Adam.

Just then an old gypsy woman came out of the tent and boxed the little girl's ears so savagely that she cried out.

It was his own little lost "Rosebud's" voice. But how much older her twelve years' hard experience had made her appear! Adam started forward, forgetting all the caution he had learned.

The little girl saw and recognized her father and mother. She threw out her arms, screaming joyfully:

"Oh, mamma, dear; oh, papa, it's me—your little Rosebud."

Mrs. Adam clasped her child to her bosom and then swooned, while her husband wept and prayed on his knees with his "little Rosebud's" hand clasped tight. But the gypsies were enraged. The father and mother were roughly treated and detained by their late companions. But little Rosie, made nimble and resourceful by her wild experiences, dashed away and brought the police. To save himself from arrest, John Croix was compelled, when taken to court with the girl and her parents, to pay Adam $400—$200 on account of the original kidnapping, and $200 for Rosie's services during her period of slavery. With this sum the now happy Adam family will return to their home to begin civilized life anew.

How I Lived with the Gypsies Till Papa and Mamma Found Me.

BY ROSIE ADAM.

I WAS stolen away from Chicago by a gypsy woman a long, long time ago. She took me to a train and I came a long ways and passed through many big cities. After a time other gypsies joined the woman that stole me and still we travelled along until we passed through a big city which they said was New York.

I was crying all the time and wanting to go back to papa and mamma, but they wouldn't let me. They told me all the time that I must be good or I would be hurt.

They took off my clothes and dressed me like the gypsy children, and boiled weeds in a pot and put the juice on my hair to make it dark, and then they taught me how to tell fortunes. I had to tell fortunes all the time and they must have made an awful lot of dollars, but they made me give them all the money.

They often beat me, and they were dirty, and the things we had to eat were not clean—and I was so homesick!

The gypsy boys smoked pipes like the gypsy men, and were very rough. The gypsy women smoked pipes and cigarettes, and all of them said awful bad words sometimes. The little gypsy girls were not nice, either. They made faces at me and pinched me because I cried so much and was always thinking of my mamma and papa and the nice, clean home they had stolen me from.

Sometimes I just knew the gypsies would keep me always, and it was no use trying to be a nice, good little girl any more. But I couldn't make myself like to be the same as they were, and then I would say my prayers and have such beautiful dreams of mamma and papa coming and finding me and taking me back home.

In the Winter it was awful cold and smoky and dirty in the gypsy tents. The beds were not clean, and when the men and boys and the old gypsy women sat around smoking their smelly old pipes I used to feel awful sick.

In the Summer I could be outdoors more, and could see the flowers and hear the birds sing. But that made me homesick, too. And after I learned to tell fortunes I had to stay close to the tent and be ready when people came to have their past read and future told.

Some of the ladies and gentlemen who visited the gypsy camp to learn their fortunes were very kind. Once, before we reached New York, a lady said when I was looking at her hand:

"My dear, you don't look like a gypsy. Your eyes are blue, and your hair is as light as mine where the dye has worn off."

I wanted to say to her: "Oh, dear lady, take me away from here. I am Little Rosie Adam and the gypsies stole me from my home in Chicago."

But one of the old gypsy women was always near to watch me and hear everything. And I knew if I told about myself I would get a terrible beating.

All this Summer I hoped for a chance to get away long enough to tell a policeman or somebody that I had been stolen, and to send word to my papa. But the gypsies watched me too close. And they kept selling me from one tribe into another. And when I was sold the last time I almost knew I would never see my papa and mamma again, for my new gypsy master was a sort of king—an awful fierce, bad man named John Croix.

In John Croix's camp I went up into New England. Near Salem we camped on a farm, and all the men and women were talking about a good place to spend the Winter. This made me feel awful. I wanted to die.

And just when I was the most miserable and unhappy I could hardly believe my eyes when I saw my papa and mamma standing there in front of our tent.

My mamma fainted and papa was crying and praying all at once. Then we all hugged and kissed, and I was so happy!

Afterward, when papa and mamma went back from the court to John Croix's camp to get their things, the gypsies tried to keep them and me too. But I slipped away and told the police, and so everything was settled.

So I am free—free to go back with mamma and papa to our home. But sometimes I am awful afraid the gypsies will catch me again and carry me off.

If they do I know I shall get a terrible beating, and I will have to stay with them always. Every night I pray that this will never happen, for I know that mamma and papa suffered even more than I did.

How the Clothes Brush May Spread Disease.

BRUSHING dusty clothes is a daily performance by the members of nearly every family. Although the dust thus removed probably was collected in streets, offices and shops frequented by all sorts of people, yet it is quite thoughtlessly set afloat in the atmosphere of sleeping rooms.

The editor of the London Lancet, foremost of medical journals, has thought this matter of sufficient importance to give space to an explanation and a warning.

The imagination does not require to be stretched very far to realize that the clothes brush might be easily responsible for the dissemination of disease. Dust is rarely, if ever, free from micro-organisms and among them disease breeding microbes have been recognized. Dust is, in fact, an enemy of the human race, a vehicle of disease, and should everywhere and on every occasion, however trifling, be prevented as far as means can be employed to that end.

The clothes brush is a vigorous dust-producing agent, and since its application is indispensable it should be used in a manner as far as possible consistent with hygienic requirements. Clothes, of course, must be brushed just as carpets must be beaten, but both processes create a nuisance which is different not in kind but only in degree. Just, therefore, as there are grounds reserved for the beating of carpets remote, as they should be, from human habitation, so also ought there to be in a household conducted on hygienic lines a special room relegated to the brushing of clothes.

Enthusiastic sanitary reformers would, no doubt, suggest that provision might also be made for trapping the dust by some such simple measure as suspending a damp sheet across the room. The daily clothes have a large capacity and a singular affinity for dust which may contain the seeds of a common cold or a sore throat or even of blood poisoning and tetanus, so that the suggestion that the clothes brush should be handled in a less indiscriminate way than is usually the case can hardly be regarded as chimerical.

If dust has been proved to be full of disease germs, the scattering of it broadcast by means of the clothes brush must be a violation of hygienic principles. The brushing of clothes is, in fact, a clumsy and an unsanitary procedure, which might with advantage be superseded by some more effectual and less offensive method. The use of some kind of vacuum brush for the purpose would, sanitarily speaking, be ideal.

Making Fun of two "Leading Ladies"

How the Dreadful Row Between Edna May and Camille Clifford is the Talk of London and the Subject of a Comedy Sketch.

PHYLLIS DARE, THE LITTLE ENGLISH BEAUTY, WHO WAS TAKEN OUT OF A CONVENT TO BE A STAR IN EDNA MAY'S PLACE AT $1,000 PER WEEK, AND WHO HAS CAPTIVATED LONDON.

NO, the Prime Minister of England has not resigned. Something more exciting than that was required to shake up London from Westminster Abbey to the Crystal Palace and keep up the agitation these ten days past.

Our American Edna May quit her $1,000-a-week engagement as star in "The Belle of Mayfair," at the Vaudeville Theatre—that was convulsion No. 1.

Convulsion No. 2—'Twas all on account of our American Gibson Girl stage model, Camille Clifford, who was engaged to the heir to an earldom, and as a future countess centred all eyes upon herself, while the star of the show had only her big salary and big type on the bills.

Convulsion No. 3—A sweet little English beauty, only sixteen years old, just out of a convent, steps into Edna May's shoes in "The Belle of Mayfair," gets Edna May's big salary and big type, and more than Edna May's big corner in the London playgoer's heart.

In London the only thing that is of greater importance than the affairs of the nation is musical comedy. Campbell-Bannerman was Prime Minister of England, but Edna May was queen of musical comedy. For this queen to suddenly abdicate was enough to convulse the nation's capital, and when her throne was taken and triumphantly held by a veritable beggar-maid of musical comedy, the convulsion became little short of a cataclysm.

The supreme test of a truly great event is the burlesquing of it on the stage. At a rival theatre, in "The Beauty of Bath," Edna May and Camille Clifford—the one the deposed queen of musical comedy and the other the adulated show girl wife of Lord Aberdare's heir—are impersonated nightly in a song called "The Stage."

Edna May is shown in her famous costume and demure make-up as the Salvation Lassie in "The Belle of New York," with Camille Clifford as a most exaggerated Gibson Girl. The point of the satire is in their gurgling affection for each other, for ever since she left "The Belle of Mayfair" company Miss May has oft repeated:

"I don't blame Miss Clifford at all. She's a dear friend of mine."

And Miss Clifford has protested:

"Edna May is perfectly lovely. There has never been an unfriendly word between us."

It must be understood that with London musical comedy audiences there is one thing more important than beauty and talent—that is the cachet of royalty, or the marked favor of the nobility. Camille Clifford in her Gibson Girl role "made good" from the start. But when her engagement to the Hon. Henry Lyndhurst Bruce, eldest son of Lord Aberdare, was announced, she leaped into extraordinary favor.

"The Belle of Mayfair" had been produced jointly by Charles Frohman and the Gatti Brothers, lessees of the Vaudeville Theatre, subject to the iron-clad agreement that Edna May was to be the star of the piece with a salary of $1,000 per week.

Being star of a musical comedy in London means having, besides the centre of the stage most of the time, all the big type on programme, bills and in newspaper advertising. Besides, a star of musical comedy, like a queen, must live up to her title. She must permit no encroachment upon her prerogatives. If a new song hit is introduced it must be she who sings it.

The best tributes from society and the gilded youth of the town are claimed by the star; if now and then a mere show girl becomes the rage among the "johnnies," it is not from necessity, but because of her gracious condescension that the fortunate show girl is permitted to make hay while the sun shines.

It is generally known in the theatrical profession that Edna May is the least addicted to "prima donna airs" of any of the stars that twinkle. She has an even temper, an amiability that seems impregnable, and a generous attitude toward subordinate members of her company that gains for her their honest affection.

"Things have come to a pretty pass, I must say, when a CHORUS GIRL gets more admiration than a LEADING LADY," said Edna May.

"Oh, indeed!" replied Camille Clifford. "Do you know, I have always found that the audience exhibits very good taste in its likes and dislikes."

"I wont stand such impertinance; I shall resign!" cried Edna May.

"Ladies! Ladies! I beg of you!" cried Manager Gatti, who had been hovering around because he scented trouble over Miss Clifford's song.

For Camille Clifford she evinced warm friendship, and the liking was mutual. The Gibson Girl's vogue with the "johnnies," even her engagement to the heir of Lord Aberdare, wrought no coolness between them. When trouble came it was purely professional in its origin.

Miss May had been looking for a new song to introduce into the performance. The London song writers knew this and had sent her in the neighborhood of two hundred manuscripts. But none of them seemed just the thing.

Then, one night, without any warning whatever, she had to witness the instantaneous success of a new song introduced by Miss Clifford. This was entitled, "Why Do They Call Me the Gibson Girl?" The verses pictured the modern high society girl always serene and unruffled, never speaking ill of other girls however much she hated them, but forever "feeding them taffy."

The audience went wild with delight. For once Miss May, taken by surprise, lost her grip on herself. When Miss Clifford, ingenuously eager for the star's commendation, went into Miss May's dressing room, burdened with the flowers which had been showered upon her over the footlights, the atmosphere was icy. The star, in deshabille, looked up from her dressing table:

"Things have come to a pretty pass, I must say, when a chorus girl gets more admiration than a leading lady!" said Edna May.

"Oh, indeed!" replied Camille Clifford. "Do you know I have always found that the audience exhibits very good taste in its likes and dislikes."

"I wont stand such impertinence! I shall resign!" cried Edna May.

"Ladies! ladies! I beg of you!" cried Manager Gatti, who had been hovering around because he scented trouble over the song.

After this little outburst, while Edna May continued with the company, and Camille Clifford continued to sing the new song at each performance, butter wouldn't have melted in the mouths of either of them. They visited each other in their dressing rooms and called each other "dear," as though bent on illustrating the very thing the new song emphasized.

So much the rage did Miss Clifford become in this song characterization that hundreds of men about town would come late, pay the price of admission, just to hear it, and then go away. Noting this, the astute managers posted a bill in the theatre lobby reading:

"Miss Clifford will appear to-night positively at 10:10."

That was the last blow. Edna May was no longer "star" except by name, courtesy and salary.

Star in Name Only.

Mr. Frohman was in New York and she did not wish to cable him except as a last resort. First she put the case to one of the Gatti brothers:

"Mr. Gatti, I shall have to insist that you abide by the terms of our contract."

"Haven't you been getting your large salary quite regularly, Miss May?"

"My contract assures my position as star of 'The Belle of Mayfair,' Mr. Gatti."

"Are you not playing the star part?" inquired the manager, blandly. "Aren't you occupying the star dressing room? Aren't you alone featured in big type on all the printing and in all the advertisements? Don't the critics recognize you as star?"

"All that is true, Mr. Gatti; but you are permitting another member of the company to do a specialty which is taking public attention away from my work as star, away from the piece generally. That specialty should have been offered to the star.

"You had many new songs to choose from, Miss May"——

"The one which you chose was not offered to me, Mr. Gatti."

"You are not the Gibson Girl of this company, Miss May. This song is called, 'Why Do They Call Me the Gibson Girl?'"

"It would have been just as good a song had you renamed it, 'Why Do They Call Me the Picture Girl?'"

The manager shrugged his shoulders—just the mere suspicion of a shrug. Stars are not to be shrugged at by managers.

"Mr. Gatti," said Edna May, firmly, "I shall have to request you to remove that bill in the lobby announcing that Miss Clifford will 'positively appear to-night at 10:10.' Also special references to her in other bills and in newspaper advertising. Those attentions belong to the star only."

"'Is it so nominated in the bond?'"

"By custom in our profession it is the star's right, Mr. Gatti."

But the obnoxious bill remained in the lobby and the song went better than ever, and Miss Clifford was getting all the applause and most of the flowers.

So Edna May cabled to Charles Frohman that she would have to leave "The Belle of Mayfair," and why. And Mr. Frohman, loyal to his star, cabled to the Gatti Brothers that his star would have to leave the Vaudeville Theatre because they were guilty of a breach of contract with her.

On a Saturday morning Miss May notified the Messrs. Gatti—and announced to the company—that the matinee and evening performances would see the last of her in 'The Belle of Mayfair.'

The Gatti brothers bore up remarkably well, considering, and Miss May's understudy was directed to be ready to go on in the star's part Monday night.

Fond Kisses at Parting.

After the evening performance Miss May and Miss Clifford edified the rest of the company by taking a most affectionate farewell of each other.

"Good-by, dear," said the Gibson Girl, "it makes me feel so sad to see you go."

"Good-by, dear," said the star as they kissed each other. "Remember, I don't blame you in the least."

Several of the company were in tears at this parting.

So Miss May was off to Paris for a vacation before beginning rehearsals of a new piece which Mr. Frohman was preparing for another London stage.

It was all splendid advertising for "The Belle of Mayfair"—and for Camille Clifford. But the theatre-going public is notoriously fickle, and when, a few evenings later, a sweet-faced little "English Rose" of a girl, innocent-eyed, looking not a day over her advertised age—sixteen—fresh from a convent in Brussels, appeared as a full-fledged star in place of Edna May's understudy—then the town fell at the feet of a new stage idol.

Her name is Phyllis Dare, and the English illustrated papers are full of her pretty face. She had had small parts, as a child, in pantomimes, and later in a [illegible]cal comedy or two, but was taken off the stage to be educated in a convent. It appears that the Gatti brothers had had their eyes on her for some time—and that may be the reason why Edna May's defection did not quite break their hearts.

Now they have twin stars, for while little Phyllis Dare gets Edna May's salary and quite as much public adulation as Edna May ever got, Miss Clifford—now actually the wife of a future earl—goes steadily on captivating Londoners with her Gibson Girl impersonations.

A PLACE WHERE THEY PRAY NOT TO HAVE DIAMONDS.

IT WOULD seem only natural that a diamond digger would be eager to find diamonds. And yet in Bahia, Brazil, the miner is always more rejoiced when he finds the apparently inferior carbon. In fact it it for carbons, not diamonds, they pray before beginning their daily toil.

Many of them go to the sacred tree near Lencoes, where the spirit of Santa Barbara, the patron saint of the miner, is said to have appeared, and place on a limb thereof a stone of the size of the carbon they wish to find.

They then pray, and it is said that the saint has often answered their prayers.

There is nothing about the appearance of the carbon that would make it attractive to the ordinary observer. It possesses neither beauty nor apparent value, but the miner well knows that if of good quality it is worth more per carat than gem rough diamonds. And there is the added advantage that the average weight of carbons encountered is much greater than the average of the diamonds they find there. The frequency of occurrence where the two are found together is in the proportion of three of the carbon to one of the diamond, by weight.

When carbons were first found in the State of Bahia in 1848, they were bought under the name of "iron stones" for twenty-seven cents a carat. In 1892 carbons were sold for $17 a carat, but to-day in New York those of good quality and of proper size command $60 a carat.

The carbon is the stone used in the so-called diamond drill. Being the hardest known material there is nothing to excel them in cutting refractory ores and stones, and they are invaluable in cutting tunnels, mines, canals, etc. Unlike the diamond, which is used solely for ornament, they wear out and the demand constantly exceeds the production. The largest carbon ever found was discovered near Lencoes in 1895.

It weighed 3,165 carats, was purchased from the miner for $16,000, and was finally exported to London where it sold for $31,145, having lost about fifty carats meantime in drying out. When cut up into fragments suitable for use in drills it sold for about $40,000, but at the present rates would be worth $158,000.

The next largest carbon was found a short time ago and is still in the hands of the miner. It weighed when found 860 carats. The sum of $26,400 was offered for it, but the miner demands $45,000.

While speaking of carbons it is interesting to note that Montana may be soon able to boast of possessing the greatest gem mine in the world. This will be the sapphire mine now in operation at Yogo Gulch, Montana, and in which developments are under way that will quadruple its extent.

A report on this mine has been prepared by George F. Kunz and will be published soon by the United States Geological Survey. This report states that the Yogo dike extends four miles on the surface, and to an indefinite depth. The entire contents are of sapphire bearing workable rock and will approximate ten million cubic yards.

TO SAW TWO SLICES OFF FIFTH AVENUE

Millionaires' Door Steps, Big Hotel Porticos, Bay Windows of Fashionable Clubs to be Torn Away to Widen New York's Most Famous Avenue.

WORLD-FAMOUS Fifth avenue, New York City, is to be shorn of all the beautiful and expensive columns, porticos, bay-windows, gardens and other architectural adornments which extend from the front of its buildings. As if a huge saw had sliced off every thing that projects, the buildings will be cut down to the bare walls, plain and featureless as tenement houses.

Millions of dollars of damage will be done, but there is no escape. Fifth avenue must be widened to permit the flood of vehicles to roll up and down the smooth asphalt.

An ancient city ordinance, long ignored and forgotten, makes the heap of disasters to property involved in this widening fall upon the owners and not upon the city.

From sidewalk to sidewalk Fifth avenue is forty feet wide. It has been found that four streams of traffic can move in this width and by using great care not interfere with each other. This is what happens all day long and much of the evening.

By the aid of numerous harsh and arbitrary mounted police the four streams are prevented from intermingling. But the cross currents at Forty-second street and elsewhere cause eddies and backings up that reach for blocks.

Pedestrians crossing the avenue during the rush hours when most people are awake take their lives in their hands. Business houses slowly driving the residents before them have gradually added to the congestion of this most swollen artery of the city with their delivery wagons.

Heavy trucks have been forbidden the use of the thoroughfare, pushcarts have been pursued until life was made uncomfortable for their owners, autos and carriages have been compelled to keep in their own lanes, and everything conceivable has been done to divert traffic to other avenues.

In spite of all, the congestion has steadily increased. At last the city has surrendered to the inevitable and confessed that haughty and fashionable Fifth avenue is a business street.

This being decided, it was determined that looks must be sacrificed to necessity. The street was examined with a view to broadening it. As said before the measure of the asphalt is forty feet from curbstone to curbstone. The four streams of carriages, automobiles and stage-coaches, which this permitted, was estimated to be a third too small.

The sidewalks themselves vary in width from twelve to eighteen feet. There is a great pedestrian double stream on each of these sidewalks a large part of the time. So it seemed hardly possible to cut a slice worth having out of the sidewalks.

Between the sidewalk and the "stoop-line" as the line where private property begins and the city rights of highway end, is called, there are no end of beautiful architectural adornments. In some cases splendid pillars support friezes costing in more than one case over $100,000. In other cases great bay-windows and marble steps and splendid porte-cocheres are the final touches for which the architects planned the buildings on both sides of the avenue.

The great Waldorf-Astoria constructed a garden with shrubs and surrounded by a hedge to prevent the curious from peering into its windows. The Holland House has a massive and expensive porch.

Then there are Sherry's open-air cafe on Fifth avenue; the lawn of the Whitney residence at Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, and the costly wrought iron fence of Cornelius Vanderbilt, inclosing his house and grounds. Dozens of minor buildings and residences have projecting ornaments and gardens which aggregate millions of dollars, and there is no denial of the fact that from an architectural and scenic standpoint Fifth avenue would be utterly plain and homely without them. But the theory of the Corporation Counsel, like that of former Borough President Cantor, is, that what Fifth avenue loses in beauty it and the city in general would gain in convenience.

Not long ago these structures were pointed out as nuisances and the proposal was made to have them removed, but it was swamped in a storm of protest by the wealthy and aristocratic property owners. At last Corporation Councel Ellison took the matter in charge and examined the law.

There was the old stoop line and there was the old city ordinance plainly enough limiting the improvements to that same stoop line. Further research showed that each property owner had built his steps or porch columns or garden on the strength of permits cheerfully granted by the Board of Aldermen. The city fathers apparently either ignorant of the ordinance or disregarding it entirely.

The ordinance being upon the books the permits were illegal and void, the city maintained, and as a test served notice on the Knickerbocker Trust Company, the worst and latest offender of them all, that they must remove everything beyond the stoop line.

A glance at the photograph of their beautiful building will show what this order meant to them and why they went to court with their protest in a hurry. These splendid columns and the facia which they support and the foundation on which they rest cost the Trust Company more than $100,000. Yet every bit is outside the fatal stoop line.

Only a few days ago Justice O'Gorman, of the New York Supreme Court, in Special Term, handed down a decision that in act makes all these millionaires squatters on public land and makes clear the way for the city to order the beautiful but offending structures torn down.

By moving the sidewalks back to the stoop lines and adding seven and a half feet on each side to the roadway there would be fifty-five feet of asphalt instead of forty and room for six streams of traffic instead of four as at present.

Where Fifth avenue skirts Central Park the widening process will be attended with less pain to property owners, both because from Fifty-ninth street up, these people have been more careful of the stoop line and because the city will shave a great slice out of the park, instead of from the front yards of the other side.

"Should the owners refuse to remove them at my demand, the city will take the matter into its own hands and raize the structures itself. But any sane owner would rather a thousand times do the demolishing himself than leave it to the city or any one else. So there will be little expense to the city involved.

The Knickerbocker Trust Company say they will appeal the case and fight it to the last, but prevailing opinion is that they are doomed and that their fate will be shared by all their neighbors on the avenue.

Millionaires to Suffer Heavily.

The Waldorf will have to give up a pretty ornamental garden between the walk and the windows on the Fifth avenue side.

Sherry's will have to give up its Parisian cafe with decorative plants surrounding it.

B. Altman & Co's big store at Thirty-fourth street and Fifth avenue will be asked to chop off its new portico.

The Cornelius Vanderbilt residence will have to demolish $40,000 worth of wrought iron fence inclosing the house and gardens.

The Whitney residence, at Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, will lose its lawn.

Then, too, there are dozens of other buildings of minor importance that must make radical changes because of encroachment on the sidewalk.

A conservative estimate of the number of buildings which will be affected by the order is fully eighty per cent in the avenue. The others in nearly every instance are small buildings or residences, which, fortunately, have escaped legal encroachments. Surveyors have already made plans from Thirty-second street to Thirty-sixth street, which district includes the Knickerbocker Trust Company, at Fifth avenue and Thirty-fourth street. In these four blocks are situated the Waldorf-Astoria, the New York Club, Aeolian Hall and other large buildings.

On the east side of Fifth avenue nearly as much havoc as on the west side will be caused. The Hotel Savoy will probably be a heavy loser. The veranda and the steps and balcony are all said to be beyond the legal limit, and, if so, they will have to go.

The Union League Club, which has a space of lawn and small fence between the sidewalk and the building, may have to lose that touch of country.

But before anything of a compulsory nature can be done it is believed that the city will have every legal technicality that astute lawyers can devise to fight against and overcome.

Never Marry a Weak-Willed Man.

NO worse lover, or husband, could possibly be chosen by a woman than a weak-willed man. Naturally, he does not show up in his true colors as a lover; it is only after a woman is tied to him that she understands the sad mistake she has made.

But even as a lover such a man is bad enough, he is so careless and heedless; he takes things very easily; he cannot be bothered; even, for instance, if he has it demonstrated before his very eyes that his sweetheart is flirting desperately, he does not interfere.

Mention the fact to him, and he smiles and remarks, "Oh, Nettie likes that sort of thing; it's all right." He is not at all jealous, he has not will-power enough for that; he is quite content to let his sweetheart do as she pleases. But how does he manage to get a sweetheart at all?

It is difficult to say, for as a rule a girl likes a man of spirit; she does not usually care much for a lover who will not demand that she desist from such a thing as flirting.

The weak-willed man, however, has no difficulty in getting a sweetheart, and, alas! he drifts into matrimony with her in the end often enough; then if the couple manage to keep their heads above water it is a marvel.

Undoubtedly the man will not push his way in the world; he lacks the energy necessary to make his mark; he may remain in the rut, but the probability is that, having a wife and perhaps family dependent on him, will merely tend to drag him down. And the unfortunate thing is that his wife not infrequently degenerates, for what is the good of her striving to do her best if the man will not exert himself?

So much for business; but consider his home. The weak-willed man cannot have a well-conducted home; he cannot expect the average wife to take up the duties of husband also in the family circle. Such a man will not trouble to see that the grocery store keeper is acting fairly, is not cheating in fact, and the same applies to the butcher and baker; he will rather pay any bills than have such a nuisance to go through as questioning the price of foodstuffs.

Perhaps you think that these matters should be attended to by the wife; but then, as just said before, she is often dragged down to his level, and the pair become a really hopeless combination. It therefore stands to reason that there must be a lot of cash lost in a home if the head of the family is weak-willed.

Then as regards bringing up children—why, the weak-willed man can do absolutely nothing in that line; even teaching a little one its A B C is too much of a strain on his indolent disposition. If the boy prove somewhat backward, he will not trouble to plod away patiently with him till the alphabet is thoroughly mastered.

Were he of the more normal type of man, he would stick to it till the youngster was perfect, but being weak-willed, he excuses himself after this manner: "Oh, Tommy's not got the brains to understand it," and the book, or set of A B C bricks, is thrown aside, and if the boy does learn his little lesson before school days arrive, it is through being taught by his mother.

Then take a weak-willed man and an extravagant wife; that kind of combination may mean ruin pure and simple, for it is most likely that she will come to rule him with a rod of iron so far as her attire goes, and the poor, silly mortal will pay out large sums of money simply in order to quiet her, that is to say if it is at all within his power.

But in other ways such a couple may go under, in the long run, for if the wife be extravagant where dress is concerned, so also may she be where domestic expenses are involved, and the man will not stretch forth a hand to avert disaster; he is too weak-willed for that; besides, think of the trouble it would mean for him, poor creature.

Recent Theatrical Failures of Notorious Women Who Tried to Make Money Out of Their Scandalous Reputations Show That Accused Murderesses and Divorcees Are No Longer Wanted On the Stage.

NO BETTER index of the taste of the times, and, perhaps, no better sign of the steadily rising moral standard in this country, can be found than the repudiation by the stage of all women whose characters have been darkened by notoriety. The time when a woman who has dragged her skirts through the mud of the divorce courts, who has deserted her children because she loved liberty and license more, the woman who is or has been the favorite of some dignitary or who enjoyed for a brief season the favor of royalty itself, the woman who stands accused and has never been acquitted of the charge of murder, can secure a prominent position on the stage and flaunt her scandaled past in the faces of the audience has gone. Moreover, it may be said, it has passed not to return again.

To the shame of the stage and the public taste which it reflected there was a time when notoriety was an asset and women whose domestic delinquencies had become public gibes and bywords went upon the stage, their moral monstrosities exhibited as physical freaks are shown to the morbid whose mouths water in cheap museums.

Crowds flocked to look upon Cleo de Merode, a beauty, an indifferent dancer, but reputed to be the sweetheart of the King of the Belgians. Mrs. Lillie Langtry, to be really exact, earned a fortune on the stage, not through the slightest histrionic talent, nor a beauty which was even then disputed, but because it was believed that the Prince of Wales, now King Edward of England, had regarded her with favor. At the beginning of her career Mrs. Cora Urquhart Potter won a measure of success, not because of talent for the stage—she then showed none—but because she was the niece-in-law of a well-known bishop, because she had read a poem that shocked Washington society, and chiefly because she had left her home and husband and child to follow after the gods of the stage. Cleo de Merode carried back a snug fortune to Paris. Mrs. Langtry made tour after tour of this country with success, dependent until recent years upon the belief in her faded romance with a Queen's son. More recently her marvelous self-preservation has drawn vaudeville audiences, the majority of whom, middle-aged women, ostensibly went to see her act, but really to acquire needed beauty hints. Mrs. Potter, gifted with intelligence and a talent that has developed with the years, has achieved standing as an actress. The new generation is going to see her play with quite a different motive from that of their parents twenty years ago.

Public taste has changed. The standard of public morality as reflected in public sentiment has risen. If not, how account for some of the very recent and most humiliating happenings?

The disastrous and humiliating failure of May Yohe, when the audience laughed at and jeered her in the exclusive little Berkeley Lyceum Theatre in New York and the ill-starred venture in which she is believed to have spent her last penny, is the most recent case in point.

Previously Mrs. W. D. Scott, once Mrs. Blanche Molineux, had essayed to sing at Keeney's Theatre in Brooklyn and had been hissed. Like May Yohe's, her engagement lasted but a week. Thus women who had traded upon their notoriety, the first because while she was still Lady Francis Hope, she had eloped to Japan with the degenerate son of a former mayor of New York, and the other because she was charged with being the cause of a murder of which her former husband, Roland Molineaux, was accused, were rebuked by the clean taste of the average American theatregoer.

These significant events followed closely upon the fiasco, "A Romance of Panama," in which Nan Patterson, a chorus girl, who had been accused of, and twice tried for the murder of her lover, a bookmaker, attempted to star. A week of playing to cold and empty houses ended her career.

Some Women, Some Emotions and Many Fools.

Discouraging as were these events to these women with mottled pasts who seek to parade them for a pecuniary consideration upon the stage, there had been precedents as disheartening in the drama of "Exit the Bad Woman from the Stage."

Mrs. Marie Wilmerding, the beautiful but erratic great granddaughter of Commodore Vanderbilt, having scattered her fortune in eccentric ways, tried to win it back on the stage. Her first appearance was at an amateur performance given for charity, when the sketch in which she appeared was so violently hissed that the curtain was rung down. She tried again, this time in William A. Brady's production, "Under Southern Skies." Courtesy to the other players forbade hissing, but Miss Allen, as she was known upon the stage, though the name proved no disguise, was received with a silence that chilled as much as the hisses had overwhelmed her.

Disastr[illegible] too, was the attempt of Mrs. Constanc[illegible]el Biddle, the beautiful divorced [illegible]e of a member of the famous intermarried Drexel-Biddle family of Philadelphia. Mrs. Biddle, causing resumes of her strange matrimonial career to be published as a herald of her coming, set out on a starring tour that flickered out as ignominiously as any humble rushlight, to an accompaniment of sundry sheriff's attachments, on the third night.

America has thus frowned again and again upon the exploitations of sins against good morals and good taste upon the stage. But Paris—happy, laughing, living Paris, the city that has denominated the United States bourgeois for its respectability—had meanwhile established a new standard of its own. It had drowned the playing of the gypsy Jancsi Rigo upon the violin in that temple of license, the Folies Bergere. A hoarse, low growl had driven him from the stage, pale beneath his swarthy skin, and shrinking into a corner. And Princess Chimay, once the American beauty and heiress, Clara Ward, who made a part of the exhibition of this precious spectacle of a pair of lovers, was held back by the skirts by an excited Paris manager, because Parisians, angered at her shamelessness, started to pelt her with vegetable missiles it had hidden in its opera-glass bags and pockets.

So one after another these women had expiated their folly, or worse, in public opprobrium. Had they been content to live quietly their expiation might have been less bitterly humiliating. At least there would have been fewer to witness it. They are all living sign posts pointing to the fact that the bad woman is no longer a magnet upon the stage.

Pathetic to the few, ludicrous to the many, was that which will probably be the final appearance on the stage of May Yohe. Twenty years ago it was the fashion to go to the music halls in Chicago to hear May Yohe sing. Her voice was uncultivated, but there were three sound and pleasing contralto notes in its lowest register. She was rosy and pert and brown eyed and the fashion. Her peculiar vogue made her wealthy. In time came Lord Francis Hope, of England, impressionable and claiming particular distinction by means of a famous blue gem known as the Hope diamond. Eventually Miss Yohe achieved both Lord Hope and the diamond. Her possession of them was brief, being interrupted by the advent of Putnam Bradlee Strong, the son of Former Mayor Strong, of New York. Impulsively she forsook the precious stone and its precious lordling attachment for the Mayor's son. Omitting the ceremony of divorce from Lord Hope she took her flight to the Orient with the Mayor's son, everywhere pursued by avid reporters, and evidently enjoying the pursuit. After the lapse of a year the English courts granted Lord Hope a divorce and he speedily acquired another Lady Hope. Putnam Bradlee Strong eloped again, this time alone, carrying the one time Lady Hope's jewels along with him. She followed him to Madrid, then to South America, and they married. Quarrels, chiefly about the allowance of money she made him, followed, and the Mayor's son again disappeared. There is a rumor that he is in jail in China on a charge involving his honesty. Next Miss Yohe will bring suit for divorce.

With this spectacular career as a background May Yohe elected to return to the stage. She made her next entrance in a musical comedy entitled "Mamzelle Champagne." There was a small, but curious audience. It went to see and it remained to chuckle.

May Yohe, who had so long defied public opinion, was pilloried upon it at last.

For six dreary nights the exhibition of mediocre ability, threadbare charms and moral obliquity continued. May Yohe's three good notes, thick and husky now, echoed back from empty benches and resounding walls. Each night there were fewer and fewer persons in the bandbox of a theatre, and on the seventh night the ushers had no duties to perform.

May Yohe, looking out from the stage upon the emptied house, thought the laughter and jeers of the first night preferable to this horrible silence, the blackness undotted by white faces and wide eyes. The curtain was rung down and she who had been Lady Hope, and later Mrs. Putnam Bradlee Strong, wept aloud in her dressing room. It was the end for the woman "who didn't care what people said."

When, eight years ago, New York was appalled by the discovery of an insidious murder, the poisoning of Mrs. Kate Adams by one who sent a bottle disguised as a bromo seltzer vial by mail, and public suspicion pointed its finger toward Roland Molineux, the chief interest in the case centered in his bride of six weeks. Mrs. Roland Molineux was a beautiful and fascinating woman of dubious antecedents. She asserted that she had earned her livelihood by singing in church choirs, but there were stories, proved to be not baseless, of another side of her life, in which were heard the popping of corks in champagne bottles at late hours, and the wheels of wandering cabs and general defiance to society. When her husband was acquitted she abandoned him and went to South Dakota, to become a much stared at member of the divorce colony. When hers was once more a free state she married W. D. Scott, the young lawyer who had secured the divorce. And all this time enterprising theatrical managers, believing they were acquainted with public taste, asked the heroine of the Molineux case to go upon the stage at a fabulous sum per week. At first she was coy.

Perhaps Mrs. Molineux-Scott suffered from premonitions. Last year she heard the call of New York's Broadway and induced her husband to leave his home and prosperous practice and try to take root in New York.

She renewed her transactions with managers and was engaged for a week at Keeney's, in Brooklyn. The police stationed at the doors to control the mob were mere ornaments of the occasion.

The few listless persons who gathered to gaze upon Roland Molineux's former wife were too apathetic to require their offices. Within they waited decorously for the woman of the celebrated case.

When she came on the stage and sang throatily they looked bored. Finally they hissed.

A Murder and Some Morals.

Mrs. Molineux herself terminated her engagement after two appearances. She said a sudden attack of bronchitis forbade her singing. Thereafter, for a year, Mrs. Molineux-Scott was silent. Last month she became vocal again. It was announced that she and May Yohe would be joint stars. A week later May Yohe disrupted the partnership. She said Mrs. Molineux-Scott had not "put up her share of the money." Accordingly Miss Yohe went down to the jeers and laughter of defeat at the Berkely Lyceum alone.

Three several times the Princess Chimay opened negotiations with New York managers to bring her to New York. Three times the managers withdrew on the plea that the salary demanded by the woman for herself and the gypsy was exorbitant. To each other and their friends they admit that they feared a duplication of the scene in the Folies Bergere. They feared, and expressed their fears, that the missiles intended for the Princess and her gypsy might be flung at them here.

The curtain has been rung down on notorious women who try to make money of their mottled pasts, and scandal-flecked divorcees and women mixed up with spectacular murders, are no longer wanted on the stage.

How to Be Your Own Beauty Doctor.

IT is a wise woman who has plenty of creams to prevent rough skin. That these things shall be pure is most important, and to insure this the best way is to make them one's self. Many of the preparations are so simple that to mix them is an easy matter.

One of the best cold creams, for instance, is made of two ounces of rose water, two ounces of almond oil, one-half ounce of spermaceti and one-half ounce of white wax. Melt the wax and spermaceti in a basin set into a dish of boiling water. As the fats congeal remove from the heat and pour into the almond oil. Then heat, and very slowly add the rose water. The cream, when done, should have the consistency of whipped cream. If desired a few drops of violet extract may be added before it congeals. Keep in a glass or earthen jar.

A delicious lip salve that may be put on before going into the street is made of one-half ounce of spermaceti ointment, seven and one-half grains of balsam of Peru, seven and a half grains of alkanet and two drops of oil of cloves. Put the alkanet into the ointment in a bottle or dish, and let stand over gentle heat until the liquid is rose-colored. Then put through a strainer. When it is clear pour off the liquid, leaving the sediment, and add the clove. When cold it should be hard, but will not become so if it has been subjected to too great heat. It must simply get warm.

THE STARTLING ACHIEVEMENT OF SANTOS-DUMONT WHO ACTUALLY FLEW THROUGH THE AIR LIKE A GIGANTIC BIRD WITH ONLY AN ENGINE AND TWO BIG WINGS

Ten Years from Now the Air Will Be Full of Flying-Machines Says Santos-Dumont.

Paris, Nov. 5.

I HAVE demonstrated that man can fly—when my aerodrome, "The Bird of Prey," started, rose into the air like a bird, covered the distance required by the Deutsch—Archdeacon cup committee, and came to the ground, winning the $10,000 prize. But that was the least important achievement of that day: I proved to all the eyes of the whole world that man has at last found the secret of navigating the air.

Ten years from now the flying machine will be as popular, as numerous and as practicable as the automobile is at this moment, in fact I venture to predict that ten years hence the automobile will be laughed at as out-of-date, slow and cumbersome thing.

Ten years from now every business man will go to his office in his aerodrome; ladies will go shopping in their flying machines; children and their nurses will be sent off to school in their aerial motors—every residence will have its aerodrome on the verandah.

It will be cheaper, lighter, faster, pleasanter and healthier than the automobile.

I am now making several machines in my workshop which will be much smaller and more compact, as well as cheaper. These will shortly be sailing over Paris. In a few years when the patents have expired the automobile manufacturers will turn these little machines out by the thousands and the skies of our cities will be darkened with the swarm.

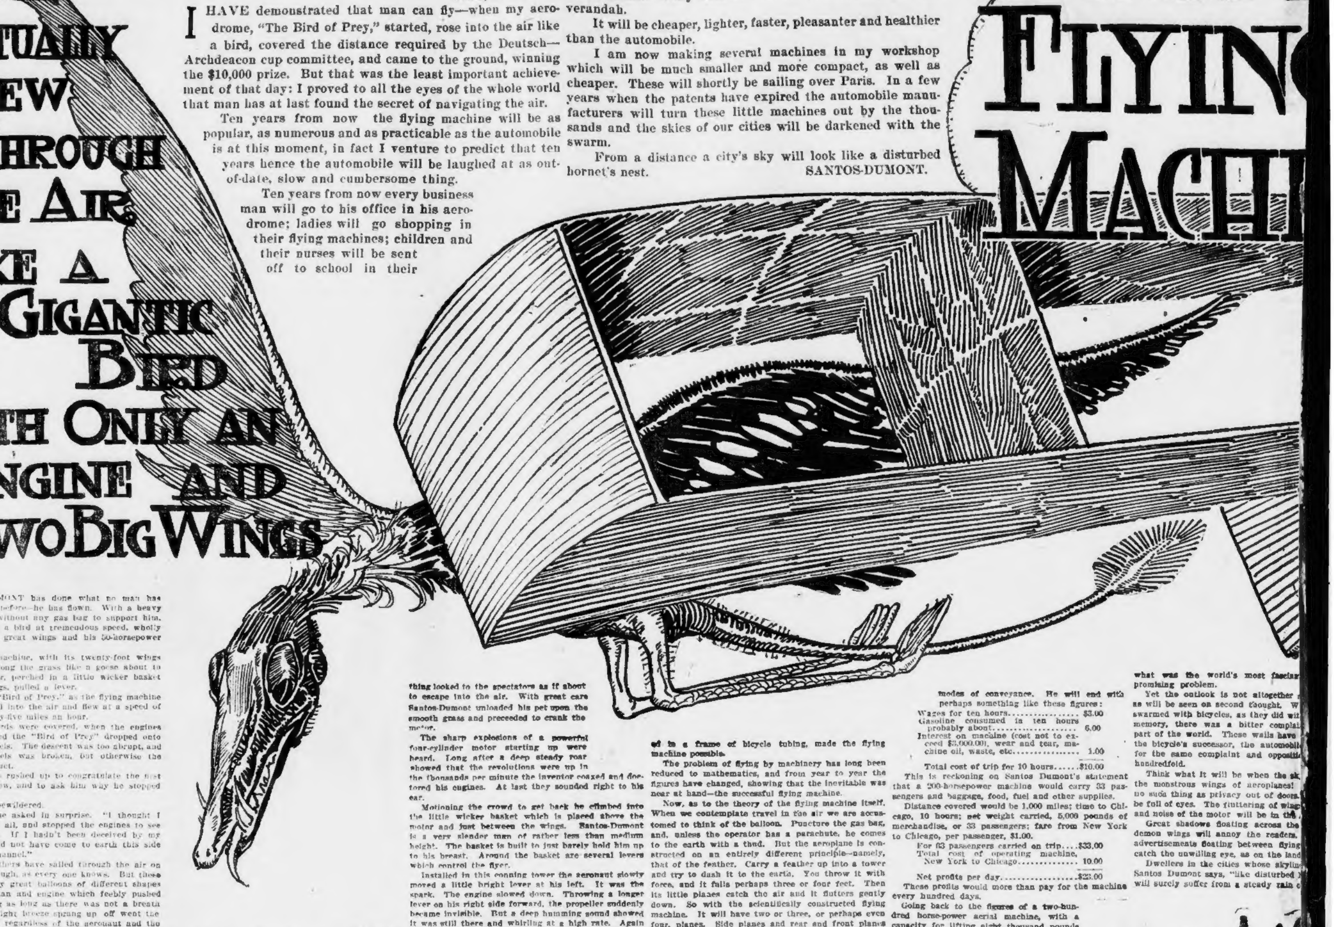
SANTOS-DUMONT.

FIRST FLYIN MACH



SANTOS-DUMONT has done what no man has ever done before—he has flown. With a heavy machine, without any gas bag to support him, he has flown like a bird at tremendous speed, wholly by means of his great wings and his 50-horsepower engines.

The strange machine, with its twenty-foot wings outspread, ran along the grass like a goose about to fly. The inventor, perched in a little wicker basket between the wings, pulled a lever.

Instantly the "Bird of Prey," as the flying machine is named, jumped into the air and flew at a speed of more than twenty-five miles an hour.

Nearly 100 yards were covered, when the engines were stopped, and the "Bird of Prey" dropped onto its alighting wheels. The descent was too abrupt, and one of the wheels was broken, but otherwise the machine was intact.

The spectators rushed up to congratulate the first man who ever flew, and to ask him why he stopped his engines.

Dumont was bewildered.

"Did I fly?" he asked in surprise. "I thought I wasn't moving at all, and stopped the engines to see what was wrong. If I hadn't been deceived by my sensations I would not have come to earth this side of the English Channel."

Dumont and others have sailed through the air on airships often enough, as every one knows. But these airships were only great balloons of different shapes supporting the man and engine which feebly pushed the great gas bag as long as there was not a breath of wind. If a slight breeze sprang up off went the airship before it, regardless of the aeronaut and the pitiful flappings of his helpless propeller.

Fifteen years of experiments with these dirigible balloons resulted in "fair weather toys," as he calls them, in which Mr. Dumont sailed over Paris, circled the Eiffel Tower and did many other tricks which, though wonderful indeed, were of no practical value.

Modeled After Prehistoric Birds.

Nearly a year ago Mr. Dumont lost interest in the airships under construction in his workshops, just outside of Paris. He spent several weeks studying bones and models of fossils in the Paris Museum of Natural History.

Scientists in many quarters of the globe were surprised by letters from the great aeronaut, asking their opinion as to the probable weight, height, wing area and flying powers of the Cycnorhampus suevicus as compared with Prenodracon brevirostris. The muscular power of these and other strange creatures which lived a million or so years ago and all other facts he could glean about them were carefully tabulated.

Muscle area was estimated in horsepower, which, of course, has more meaning to the airship expert. The flying fish next occupied his attention, and then the flying squirrels, and finally bats. Mr. Dumont can tell you just what fraction of a horsepower a flying fish develops when he leaves the water and skims through the air, and how much gasoline he would burn if he derived power from a little engine to carry him at twenty miles an hour around the world.

Neighbors noticed with sorrow that the good-natured Santos-Dumont was amusing himself by teasing a stork.

The inventor enticed the bird into a narrow inclosure and then frightened it into sudden flight, which he observed with deep interest. When at last the stork refused to have anything more to do with Mr. Dumont he turned his attention to pigeons.

One day he appeared at the workshop, his arms full of pictures of flying creatures, living and extinct, called his foreman and workmen together and delivered a lecture.

"We have been very stupid," he said. "We have spent all these years experimenting with great, big balloons and tiny, light engines. Any sailor knows, and we should have seen it at once, that we could never push a monstrous thing like a balloon through the air successfully in the face of any wind.

"Nature experimented with flying machines for thousands of years before she made a real success of it, and yet we have never taken advantage of these experiments.

"Now, here are models and specifications of half a dozen fairly successful flying machines which nature made a million years ago. I want you to forget all about gas bags and make me a machine along these lines.

"Bamboo, steel or aluminum will do instead of bones, silk and canvas are as good as membrane, scales or feathers. I have ordered a 50-horsepower engine in place of muscles, and I myself will be the brains."

Then began a long series of experiments. Wings or aeroplanes were built of bamboo, piano wire and silk. Santos-Dumont constructed a motorcycle with a 5-horsepower engine geared to a fan in front of the machine.

The engine was not connected in any way with the wheels as in other motor cycles, but the suction of this fan alone towed the machine along the road at a rate of forty nine and one-half miles an hour.

"I am satisfied," said Santos-Dumont, "that my idea of a propeller is all right now: the only difficulty lies in the wings and the tail." So the first attempt at a flying machine along the lines which nature first ventured was almost a winged motorcycle. Three light bicycle wheels, a great pair of wings and an extension in front like the wings which he called his tail. It was taken out on the road for trial.

The engine was started and the fan began to revolve faster and faster and the machine started along the road. It rapidly gained speed until it was rushing along at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour. Mr. Santos-Dumont himself sat in a little basket in front of the wings just over the engine. When a speed of twenty-five miles an hour was reached Mr. Dumont moved a lever. The angle of the tail was changed slightly and up flew the strange machine into the air.

It was the inventor's first actual flight and it only lasted a few seconds, for the sensation of flying confused him. He tipped the tail back a little too much and down went the flying machine to the ground with a crash. One of the wheels was injured and the propeller was completely ruined, but Santos-Dumont had flown and was convinced that only a little practice and improvement was needed for him to sail over Paris.

Back went the "Bird of Prey" to the work shop, where a new propeller blade and a new wheel were put on. The wings were also adjusted differently because Dumont, in his brief flight, had found that the "Bird of Prey" had shown an inclination to sway in the air as a gull does, first on one wing and then on the other.

First It Ran Along the Grass.

The engines were tuned up to a little higher pitch and everything was in readiness for another trial. The inventor then informed the Aero Club of Paris that he would like to try for the Deutsch-Archdeacon $10,000 prize.

To win this prize it was necessary to fly a distance of a little less than 100 feet. But the flying must be done in a machine heavier than the air. More than that, there must be no gas bag whatever.

The Aero Club assigned the 7th of October for the trial. Notices were published to "all whom it might concern," that on this day all people disposed to make $10,000 by merely flying 100 feet under the required conditions should appear at a spot in the fields of Bagatelle in France with their apparatus.

Santos Dumont and his "Bird of Prey" were on hand several days before. The machine was housed in a great canvas tent. Either nobody else but Dumont could fly or perhaps cared for the money, but several thousand spectators were on hand and photographers, automobiles and motorcycles in great numbers.

The day was clear, but a slight wind was blowing, on account of which the officers of the club offered to postpone the trial. But the inventor said he was glad to have a chance of flying in the face of it.

When all was ready for the test the tent was opened and the flyer brought forth. The machine was balanced unsteadily on a small truck.

A dozen men pushed it out into the centre of a great open pasture. The wings fluttered and the whole thing looked to the spectators as if about to escape into the air. With great care Santos-Dumont unloaded his pet upon the smooth grass and preceeded to crank the motor.

The sharp explosions of a powerful four-cylinder motor starting up were heard. Long after a deep steady roar showed that the revolutions were up in the thousands per minute the inventor coaxed and doctored his engines. At last they sounded right to his ear.

Motioning the crowd to get back he climbed into the little wicker basket which is placed above the motor and just between the wings. Santos-Dumont is a very slender man of rather less than medium height. The basket is built to just barely hold him up to his breast. Around the basket are several levers which control the flyer.

Installed in this conning tower the aeronaut slowly moved a little bright lever at his left. It was the spark. The engine slowed down. Throwing a longer lever on his right side forward, the propeller suddenly became invisible. But a deep humming sound showed it was still there and whirling at a high rate. Again the little bright lever was touched, moved over slowly in short easy jerks. The humming rose rapidly in pitch and it was noticed that the machine was running over the grass on its little bicycle wheels.

Into the Air With a Leap.

At the end of a hundred yards it was going too fast for a mounted gendarme to keep up. At this point the lone passenger was seen to pull a third lever. It was the throttle and caused the engine to double its speed and spit fire from the exhaust.

For fifty yards it soared straight as an arrow, then it veered off to the left and travelled another fifty yards in a semi-circle, became silent, stopped and fluttered to the ground.

As in the former trial, the bicycle wheels gave way when the earth was reached.

The first human being to fly was still in his conning tower, in a bewildered way trying to get his bearings.

"I can't understand this failure," he said. "I was sure it would fly."

"Failure?" they shouted. "Why, you have flown a hundred yards and won the prize! But why did you stop the engines?"

"Did I fly?" he asked in amazement. "I thought I was just hanging in the air after I left the ground, and shut off the gasoline to see what was the matter.

"The feeling is so unearthly, so utterly different from ballooning, that I was overwhelmed and confused. If I had known that I was really flying, and had not been deceived by my sensations, I would not have stopped for anything this side of the English Channel."

The broken wheels made it out of the question to make another start that day. So the air craft was returned to the repair shop. In a few days new wheels replaced the old; but the "Bird of Prey" has remained indoors on account of the heavy rainstorms which have visited France ever since.

Though Santos Dumont got his ideas from nature's first crude flying machines, he admits that the much neglected bicycle made the construction of the "Bird of Prey" possible. The intermediate step was the automobile.

The keen competition in bicycle building which taught the manufacturers to draw finer and lighter steel tubes, and to achieve such delicacy of adjustment as was not dreamed of before except in watches, and finally to perfect the pneumatic tire, made the automobile possible.

The automobile has stimulated the development of the gasoline motor. Higher powered engines, of less bulk and weight and far greater efficiency, are turned out each year than the year before. A modern 24-horsepower motor can be hidden in a writing desk, while a coal-burning steam engine of the same power would fill a hall bedroom.

So the small, powerful automobile engine, supported in a frame of bicycle tubing, made the flying machine possible.

The problem of flying by machinery has long been reduced to mathematics, and from year to year the figures have changed, showing that the inevitable was near at hand—the successful flying machine.

Now, as to the theory of the flying machine itself. When we contemplate travel in the air we are accustomed to think of the balloon. Puncture the gas bag, and, unless the operator has a parachute, he comes to the earth with a thud. But the aeroplane is constructed on an entirely different principle—namely, that of the feather. Carry a feather up into a tower and try to dash it to the earth. You throw it with force, and it falls perhaps three or four feet. Then its little planes catch the air and it flutters gently down. So with the scientifically constructed flying machine. It will have two or three, or perhaps even four, planes. Side planes and rear and front planes will guide its passage through the air. One or more of these may even be broken without danger. With duplicate engines, and quadruplicate driving screws, and octuplicate cylinders the risk of getting the machinery out of order will be comparatively small. But it is almost impossible that the entire eight engines should get out of order at one time, or that more than one of the planes should be in any way injured.

But even stopping all the machinery, the properly constructed aeroplane would be in no danger. On the contrary, it would flutter slowly down to the earth, the operator guiding it with skilled hands. If by chance it should take a sudden flight in one direction, the throwing up of a plane would cause it to rise again, just as the bird, coming swiftly down, suddenly elevates its wing, and by the resolution of forces again ascends the air.

Even those most advanced in the theory entertain some doubts as to the aeroplane being developed to a point where many thousand pounds may be carried. But it is certain that it will be possible to go into capacities able to move many persons. The status of the problem, as it is to-day, is this:

1. A machine capable of exerting one horsepower can raise in the air a dead weight of about forty pounds.

2. An engine may be constructed at a weight of less than five pounds to the horsepower.

Yet not long ago an engine capable of developing a horsepower weighed as much as a horse.

The engine for this horsepower would weigh, let us say, one thousand pounds.

New York to Chicago for $1.00.

The car, propellers and supporting planes should weigh not to exceed two thousand pounds additional.

This would make a total of three thousand pounds.

The remaining capacity of the car now approaches five thousand pounds, which would be equivalent to thirty-three persons of an average weight of one hundred and forty pounds each, or two and a half tons of merchandise.

We do not need to consider whether so large a car will be a possibility. Aeroplanes with one-fifth this capacity would be of the highest value in commerce. A carrying capacity of one thousand pounds, with an engine no greater than seventy-horsepower, and a possibility of flight exceeding one hundred miles an hour, would have in it possibilities for commerce that can be scarcely estimated.

As a war machine, or, rather, as a peace machine, the value to the world would be beyond computation.

It is not expected that the present generation of grown-up people will ride much in flying machines at once. No matter how swift and safe they may be, it will be as much of an innovation as was the railroad in its days of novelty. But the younger generations will seize the opportunity.

Once the practicability of moving aeroplanes is determined by scientists, a few bolder, fun-loving men and women will lead the way.

Then the business man will sit down and figure the proposition out in dollars and cents, comparing an aerodrome or aeroplane in a day's journey of say one thousand miles as compared with the present modes of conveyance. He will end with perhaps something like these figures:

Wages for ten hours..................	$3.00
Gasoline consumed in ten hours probably about....................	6.00
Interest on machine (cost not to exceed $3,000.00), wear and tear, machine oil, waste, etc.................	1.00
Total cost of trip for 10 hours......	$10.00

This is reckoning on Santos Dumont's statement that a 200-horsepower machine would carry 33 passengers and baggage, food, fuel and other supplies.

Distance covered would be 1,000 miles; time to Chicago, 10 hours; net weight carried, 5,000 pounds of merchandise, or 33 passengers; fare from New York to Chicago, per passenger, $1.00.

For 33 passengers carried on trip....	$33.00
Total cost of operating machine, New York to Chicago..............	10.00
Net profits per day..................	$23.00

Going back to the figures of a two-hundred horse-power aerial machine, with a capacity for lifting eight thousand pounds—three pounds weight of machine and engine—the merchandise-carrying capacity will be in excess of four thousand pounds. Accepting the figures first given for operating this machine as approximately correct, we should have four thousand pounds of merchandise moved a thousand miles at a cost of ten and a half cents per hundred pounds. An oil pipe-line could do no better.

There would be no delays from snow blockades, nor from freshets. Extraordinary winds would be the chief difficulty to be overcome, and by rising to the proper elevation, even these might be avoided.

Santos-Dumont.

The eventual crowding of the atmosphere with flying craft moving at 100 miles an hour, or probably even faster, would compel rules of the air something like present rules of the thoroughfares in large cities. Through craft going at hight speed for long distances would be perhaps be compelled to maintain a height of half a mile.

Local traffic nearer the ground could be divided into lanes a quarter of a mile wide, so that all traffic would be in one direction in each lane. There would be as in the cities mounted policeman—mounted on small flyers to keep the machines in their proper lane.

The third stage in the use of the aerial machine would, as has already been stated, be when the business man, watching the flight, first of the scientists, and then the sportsmen, would come to put proper figures on paper and discover the cheapness with which freight and passengers might be transported. There would be little discussion after that. The opportunities for profit will do the rest with a rapidity which in a decade will leave the children in the schools wondering that their fathers could have ever been so cowardly and so stupid in attempting what was the world's most fascin basis are as follows: "Then the spirit took me up and I heard behind me the voice of a great rushing, saying, 'Blessed be the glory of the Lord from His place.' I heard also the noise of the wings of living creatures that touched one another, and the noise of a great rushing." — (Ezekiel III., 12 and 13.) Other passages in the same book refer to various voyages made by the prophet in an airship, according to Mr. Cannon.

He considers that the airship actually carried the prophet about heaven, but that naturally a person of that age would look upon a machine just as a savage to-day would look upon an auto as a living creature, a sort of angel or dragon or something of the kind.

The inventor states that his latest full-size machine is to be driven by a 60-horsepower eight-cylinder gas machine. Gasoline is to be stored in a tank in the frames of the aeroplane. The motor is connected with the ends of the main shaft direct, and the speed is to be 2,000 revolutions per minute, or probably better. There are also to be a number of wheels built according to the description in Ezekiel.

"The noise of the wheels" mentioned in the Bible bothers Mr. Cannon more than anything else, because he thinks, doubtless, these wheels must have been pneumatic tired, and cannot see why they should have made any noise, though possibly the prophet refers to gears or propellers, as all these things would probably have had no better name in those days than "wheels."

When it rests the device stands upon legs which may be raised or lowered when the vessel is to be flown. Compressed air is the force to be used in the frames of the flying machine. The wings are then drawn together to stretch them. The extension legs are drawn up so that the wheels rest upon the ground.

The throttle is opened and the motor started. When the machine is first set in motion it is intended to run along the ground upon the wheels, and not to rise until the propellers are rotated at a considerable speed.

The inventor states that Ezekiel's plans are the first he ever worked upon, in which he could suggest no improvement.

A company was started to manufacture and place on the market the "Ezekiel Flying Machine."

Unfortunately the first model, although it ran over the ground very well, could not be induced to climb into the air, and financial troubles have temporarily placed a damper upon the clergyman's further invention in this line. He does not blame Ezekiel for the failure of the ship, but regards his own inability to interpret and follow the prophet's instructions as revealed in his book to be the real weakness.

A Parisian named Henri Villard constructed a strange flyer a decade ago, which many think would fly if perfected mechanically. The ruins of the machine still exist.

The main part of the machine consists of a rather flat umbrella of considerable size, made rigid by an exterior steel rim and wire spokes. On the stick portion of this large umbrella and under it are two projecting arms, one carrying a screw to move the apparatus in a horizontal direction, the other a rudder for steering purposes. Still lower down on this stick, on one side of it, say near the handle of the umbrella, is the motor, and opposite it the seat for the operator. The motor has two functions, one of which is to drive the screw for obtaining the horizontal motion, and the other, which is the novel part of this form of flying machine, for rotating at a rapid speed the umbrella portion. The idea is that the rapidly rotating umbrella with the comparatively heavy rim will act like the wheel of a gyroscope, and that this will tend to keep the machine from being easily moved out of the plane of rotation. The umbrella portion, which is practically a parachute, is a large flat wheel of 22 feet external diameter, resembling somewhat a bicycle wheel, the rim of which is made of half-inch diameter circular steel tubing, and this is covered on its upper portion with stout cotton balloon canvas. The parachute or wheel portion is not really a true wheel, but built on the plan of a helix, so that by rapid rotation it would grip the air as a propellor grips the water, and lift the inventor and the whole machine into the air.

One of the last frantic efforts to make the balloon keep abreast of Santos-Dumont aerodrome triumph, is the scheme to construct a balloon capable of staying in the air a month or more at a time. Julian P. Thomas, the well known aeronaut, has recently announced the construction of a gas bag which he believes will do this.

Dr. Thomas believes he has discovered a material for balloon construction far superior to that now used, and that it will solve many aerial problems.

"Every time I make an ascent," said Dr. Thomas, "it costs me $100 for acid alone. I sincerely believe that, with the new material, I will be able to inflate a much larger balloon than my 60,000 cubic foot one, and at a much reduced cost. I will be able to stay in the air for days or weeks, or as long as I like, with the contemplated balloon."

An Exercise for the Legs While Holding a Pole back of the Neck Across the Shoulders—As Practised by Women and Girls in the Women's Open Air Gymnasium in Berlin.

IN all parts of the civilized world women—whose duties and manner of life generally keep them within doors much more than is the case with the average man are cultivating more and more the "open air bath" habit.

Several times in the last few years this newspaper has described and illustrated with photographs the methods whereby women and girls organized in health clubs were absorbing through their skin fresh air and sunshine, as nature intended they should.

There are such women's clubs in New York and other large cities of the United States, and in Paris, France, there is quite a famous one, composed of rich society women and their daughters, which maintains a finely equipped open air gymnasium in the Quartier Bartholomew.

In Berlin especially the open air gymnasium idea has developed until women and girls, even those in very moderate circumstances, are provided with the means of building up strong, healthy bodies.

Several years ago, with the approbation of the Kaiser himself, some philanthropic citizens of Berlin secured a plot of ground in the city's outskirts where the soil was sandy and well drained, inclosed it within high walls, erected various kinds of gymnastic apparatus and opened it for the use of any woman desiring such advantages at a very small charge.

Within a few weeks every day when the weather was suitable saw this open air women's gymnasium well filled with women and girls of all ages. Grandmothers, mothers, [illegible] even children barely [illegible] in garments just sufficient for [illegible], were there, digging in the sand or exercising on different apparatus and [illegible] as merry as so many [illegible].

[illegible] girls swinging, climbing [illegible] ladders and exercising on the [illegible] were the favorite amusements. The grandmas sat on the sand in the sun [illegible] with bare feet, dug in the soft earth with spades beside their little grandchildren. The matrons gained red cheeks and supple limbs by running races and doing "stunts" on wooden horses and horizontal bars.

It was apparent that these exercises, coupled with the advantage of so much of the body being bared to the sunshine and fresh air, produced the most favorable results in the way of health and increased strength and vitality.

The Body Beautiful Club.

As a result of these observations, a circle of wealthier women in Berlin have lately formed an outdoor organization called "The Body Beautiful Club." In this case not only health, but the development of a symmetrical body with grace of movement, is the object.

Each fair member of the "Body Beautiful Club" aims to become a veritable Diana. They meet on pleasant days in a high boarded enclosure where there is both sunshine and the shade of trees, with soft turf for their merrier gambols.

These nymphs are clad only in the airiest of Greek costumes, and their favorite exercise takes them through the mazes of sylvan dances. But they also practice systematic calisthenics to promote symmetry and suppleness of all the limbs, and run races in which they vie with each other in length of stride.

Celebrated German doctors are foremost among those of their profession to declare that the best possible cure for many diseases, particularly of women, is going without clothes—in the open air, if possible; otherwise within doors, with windows open, while sufficient exercise is taken to avoid catching cold.

Clad only in a light wrapper, so that the air has ready access to the whole surface of the body, a woman can throw open all the windows of her apartment and take a very advantageous air bath while dancing about the room and jumping over chairs, or performing regular calisthenics to keep the circulation going.

These air baths are declared to be especially efficacious in the case of nervous troubles, and kidney, liver, stomach and skin diseases. A large number of these common ills are attributed to the habit of wearing clothes—a habit which exists only among the human species, for it is well known to science that the natural clothing of animals, while preventing the radiation of body heat in cold weather, is so perfectly ventilated that the pores of the skin are always open to the air.

It is a function of the skin to carry off a large part of the body's waste matter, but it cannot perform this important function with any degree of thoroughness when contact with free air is prevented, as by close fitting modern clothing.

The Skin Is Starved for Lack of Air.

Clothing, even when it is changed frequently, does not accomplish anything like a thorough removal of the waste matter which exudes from the skin pores. Only the free circulation of air can do this, causing the evaporation of the liquid matter while purifying the skin and stimulating it to healthy activity.

When close fitting clothing is worn during the greater part of each twenty-four hours the skin, which is really an organ of the body, and a very important one—becomes clogged and inactive. The hours of sleep are too brief and the confinement of bedclothes too close to enable it to clear itself and recuperate during that period.

Hats and shoes are particularly under indictment by these doctors. The pressure of the hat band obliges the delicate and sensitive scalp to exist for long periods in a chamber of exhausted and impure air, causing its blood vessels to become gorged and the circulation robbed of its due share of oxygen.

Nature designed that the skin pores of the feet should be especially active in throwing off effete matter and in absorbing purifying elements from the air and the earth, yet it is the civilized custom to keep them most of the time encased in air and water tight shoes, making access to the atmosphere wholly out of the question.

Men who, like women, have the habit of wearing artificial head covering as little as possible, and then of a soft and well ventilated kind, are observed to keep their original crop of hair into old age. The vital principle of the Kneipp cure is going about out of doors in the bare feet—the dew wet grass part of the treatment belonging to the school of hydropathy and being merely incidental to the main treatment—which is to bare the feet to free air and earth, as primeval man did.

The Berlin "Body Beautiful Club" represents a refinement of the air bath principle, as practised by their humbler sisters in the Berlin Open Air Gymnasium. In the case of the latter the air bath is the main consideration, the simple gymnastic exercises being more in the nature of an amusement than for the purpose of producing definite improvements in physique.

The "tug of war," when a score or more women and girls on each side strive to drag the opposing party over the line at the centre of the rope, is a most exhilarating contest, productive of much hilarity. Another exercise that is very popular among these women in humble life consists in balancing a long pole horizontally on the shoulders, back of the neck, while rhythmically bending and straightening the legs at the knees. While this exercise is very beneficial to the leg muscles, it is still more a recreation and an amusement. It opens the pores of the skin, causing the perspiration to flow, while free access of air to all parts of the body accomplishes its purifying and stimulating effects.

While gaining the full advantage of the air bath the members of the "Body Beautiful Club" select exercises of a different character, the main object is the symmetrical development of all parts of their bodies. From the ancient Greeks, whose women as depicted in sculpture have remained artists' ideals for feminine beauty of form and grace—they have borrowed the sylvan dance.

Back to Ancient Greek Models.

Than this no exercise goes more appropriately and advantageously with the ideal air bath costume—loose, flowing draperies. It produces grace with strength. Unconsciously the body and limbs recover their elasticity and are freed from the affectations and constraint created by even the suggestion of modern clothes.

But the women of the "Body Beautiful Club" understand that limbs enslaved by generations of captivity in unhygienic garments cannot regain their strength and freedom of movement all at once. So they also practise a series of systematic movements calculated to develop each part of the body separately.

Against one wall of this outdoor enclosure hand rails are placed at different heights, to which the student of strength and grace clings with one hand while extending and flexing the opposite leg and arm, the whole weight being at the time on the other leg. Ballet masters use much the same method in the earlier lessons to their pupils. This exercise does not make big muscles—which are not desired—but it unbinds those that already exist so that the limb becomes well rounded and supple.

The parallel bars, too, are used with advantage in severer exercises to straighten the back and strengthen its muscles, so that the body, in any position, becomes gracefully self supporting.

Superfluous fat on any part of the body does not long withstand this sort of treatment. Oxygen is nature's great enemy of excessive tissues and all waste body products. Through the lungs it is taken into the blood in the largest quantities during spirited exercise, and when clothing does not interfere a similar advantage accrues through the air bath. Indeed, the "Body Beautiful Club" appears to be well named.

The similar organization of rich women and their daughters in Paris, in the Quartier St. Bartholomew, has produced such fine results in the three years of its existence that applications for membership greatly outnumber vacancies, the size of the open air enclosure limiting the attendance at one time to less than two hundred women and girls. In this club, while the members wear as little clothing as is seemly, more attention is paid to calisthenics in the air bath than to classical sylvan features introduced by the "Body Beautiful Club."

Nevertheless, the classical idea of beautifying open air exercises is growing in France as well as in Germany. The originator and present high priestess of this cult is Miss Isadore Duncan, the American dancer who was barred from a Berlin stage because she insisted on dancing in her bare feet.

In spite of this rebuke Miss Duncan's open air Grecian costume philosophy of dancing in particular, and life in general, captivated the German and French ladies, who, in adding gymnasium exercises, have merely "gone her one better."

Every year there is an increase in the number of young women in American and English colleges who go in for outdoor sports, and the tendency is steadily to more and more free the body from restraining and air excluding garments.

Even the working young women of large cities in the United States are not denying themselves the advantages of the air bath. In New York City there are several clubs composed of young women stenographers, clerks, bookkeepers, cashiers, etc., who utilize part of their lunch hour in open-air exercises—usually in some available and secluded office building roof, fitted with simple apparatus. With some of these boxing, under the direction of a competent instructor, is a favorite exercise, a few minutes of spirited contest with the gloves in a free play of air about their bodies proving more restful than an hour of loafing and gossip.

THE SECRET OF HUMOR.

BY A HUMORIST.

RICHARD CARLE, the actor and playwright, who stars in plays of his own making, and is one of the funniest men on or off the stage, says that humorists are neither born nor made—that they are both born and made.

"A humorist is 60 per cent born," he said. "That gives him a good start. He is 40 per cent made. For instance, a man may be born funny, and if he is, he will remain amusing to an extent, but, like every other talent that for mirth must be cultivated. If I had a son who gave evidence of a predilection for humor I would cultivate it in every possible way. He would be brought up in an atmosphere of good, wholesome fun.

"I would provide him with a merry mother. Mrs. Carle is the most cheerful woman in the United States. There would be no long faced servants with grievances about. When I held sessions with my son they would not be conferences on ways and means. I would not tell him my troubles, but my joys. Many a funny man has almost lost his funny way of looking at things because his humor was blighted by melancholy home surroundings. I would tell my son good jokes. If I hadn't any good ones of home manufacture I would tell him others, even ancient ones, to train his faculty for grasping the point of a witticism. When he was able to read I would supply him with witty books. There were humorists in the early Roman and Greek history, and if necessary I would go back to them. If I couldn't provide him with joke pictures I would see that there were no lugubrious ones in his nursery. And when I took him out with me I would point out the humorous sights in a crowd. Mirth, like music, given a fair start, may be acquired."

Mr. Carle, who is the author of "The Storks," "The Tenderfoot," "The Maid and the Mummy" and "The Mayor of Tokio" and who is responsible for all but the wings and wattles of "The Spring Chicken," he having adapted it from the French and left few Gallic reminders, gives this analysis of humor.

"The chief element of humor is spontaneity. What we relish most in the joke that makes us laugh is the surprise of it. Jokes should be natural, should bubble and burst to our delight and amazement. After spontaneity in importance comes terseness. The terser the joke the better. The position of the joke in a sentence is of great importance. My estimate of the success of my own attempts at humor is that seven out of ten reach and please the audience. Why don't the others go? I don't know. I try to find out and if I can't improve them to the laughing point I drop them. I don't blame the audience. I examine the joke and myself to see what is the matter with us.

"Laughter is the tonic of life. Everybody wants to laugh. An American audience will laugh if it has occasion. Many jokes fail to cause laughter because they are smothered with words. In one situation in "The Spring Chicken" I said, 'This is the first time I ever knew my wife to pay me alimony.' Nobody laughed. I changed it to 'Never before did I get alimony from my wife' and the laugh came. There were two reasons for this. The joke was shorter and the arrangement was stronger. I omitted 'This is the first time' and other superfluous words, and I placed the joke in the last three or four words of the sentence, where they belong. The relative position of the joke in the story is the same as that of the tail to the dog, but it is a most essential tail.

"The funniest man in the world is Mark Twain. His subtlety is his greatest charm as a humorist. His jokes are never so obvious as to be cheap. The funniest story I ever heard is one told of Twain. The newspapers cabled to Europe to ask if it were true that he was dead. His answer was: 'Reports grossly exaggerated.'

"Sometimes a joke miscarries, and the perpetrator never can find out what is wrong with it. One of my favorite jokes in 'The Spring Chicken' only brings a ripple, never an open laugh. That is 'Matrimony is the most uncertain of all forms of gambling.'"

Contrary to the adage about the estimation in which a man is held by his valet to Mr. Carle's valet dresser Mr. Carle is a hero. The dresser says his admiration is founded upon the fact that Mr. Carle "wakes up well." The comedian greets the day with a joke, instead of hurling a boot at it.

"What is this, Friday?" grunted Mr. Carle one morning.

"No, sir; Sunday."

"Pshaw! We never get up on Sundays."

"You certainly have been having a heavy sleep, Mr. Carle," observed Jim.

Carle shot up to a sitting position and tossed off the bedclothes. "Sleep is a semblance of death, you fool!"

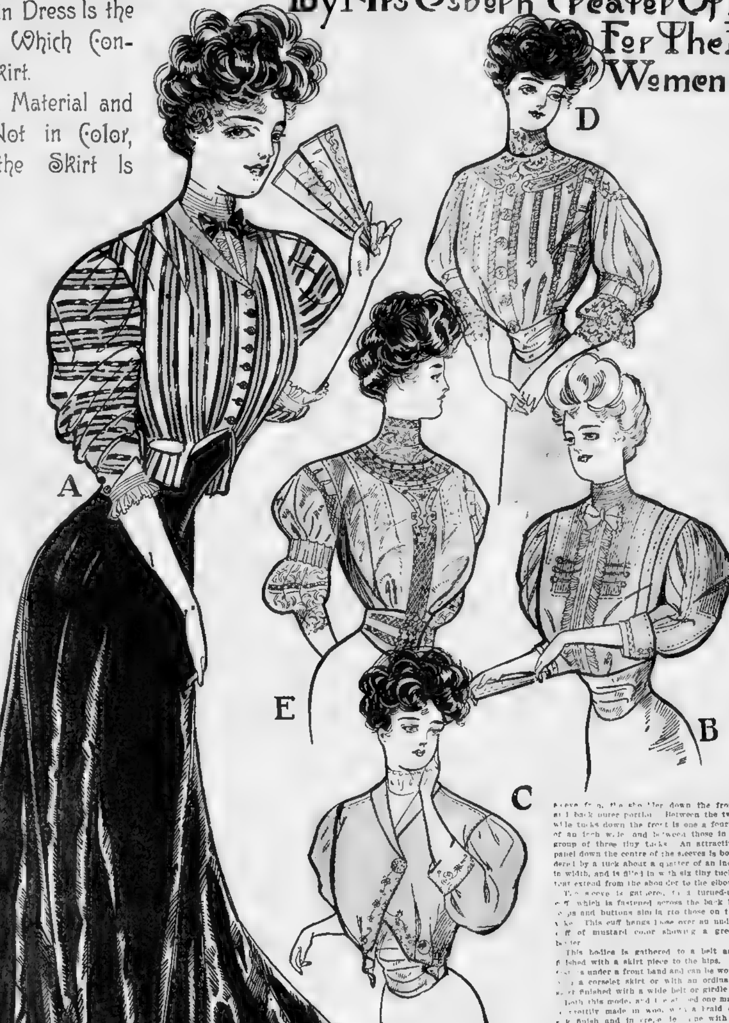
The Important New Separate Bodices

By Mrs. Osborn, Creator of Fashions for the Fashionable Women of America

The Newest Thing in Dress Is the Separate Bodice Which Contrasts with the Skirt. Bodices Contrast in Material and in Decoration, Not in Color, Except When the Skirt Is Black or the Stripe or Figure in Contrast.

Bolero Effects the Ultra Fashionable Things in Bodices Upon Dressy Gowns. Satin, Striped Velvets and Silks, Crepe-de-Chines and Similar Fabrics in Vogue for Separate Bodices. Silk, Satin and Thinner Bodices Very Correct with Skirts of Cloth, Velvet and Henrietta.



THE very newest thing in the way of dress is the separate bodice which contrasts with the skirt in material and pattern, and sometimes in color, also.

The separate bodice is not a revival of the contrasting waists and skirts which were worn a few years ago. It is a dis[illegible] however, [illegible] to [illegible]

Bodices in stripes and figures may be worn with skirts which have the same ground color. Where the figure or stripe dominates the coloring of the bodice the [illegible] with the stripe, [illegible] shades [illegible] should be [illegible]

[illegible] the simpler [illegible] of separate [illegible] since [illegible] worn and can be easily imitated.

Figure A is a good example of the fashion of wearing striped blouses with skirts [illegible] of dark blue silk, striped with velvet, which, because of [illegible] being a deeper hue. The skirt is of velvet in the [illegible] of the stripe, but cloth or henrietta would look well in the shade of the silk. A black skirt may also be worn with this [illegible]. A fitted white silk lining is the foundation for this bodice, which is gathered [illegible] fashion. [illegible] coming to a point in front and opening in a V over a little white lingerie [illegible]. This has a tucked [illegible] with [illegible] pleating [illegible] an [illegible] of daintiness. C.—Separate bolero bodice in mustard-colored satin with girdle of the same and decoration of pale embroidery.

[illegible] to pleats, which are released [illegible] the shoulder and again caught to the lining in front under two little straps of stitched velvet, one on each side the fastenings.

A box pleat down the middle of the back terminates in a jet buckle and little velvet ends. The fulness of the back is caught under a narrow stitched strap which begins at the underarm seams and crosses the back. A row of jet buttons trims the front.

The striking feature of this bodice is its fetching short waisted bolero effect. The underarm seams are open a few inches from the bottom, which hangs loose from the lining, permitting a corselet skirt to be slipped on over the lining and under the bolero. This is edged all around the bottom with a narrow velvet fold and is cut away at the bottom in front.

Its sleeves are made with the stripe running crosswise. It has only an inside seam which is gathered. Below the elbow the edge of the sleeve is bound with velvet and trimmed upon the outer side with jet buttons. An undersleeves of lingerie tucked and with a finish of knife pleating hangs below the silk sleeve.

Chiffon, mousseline or lace could be used in place of lingerie for the neck and sleeves. Bottle green is one of the new shades of that pleasing color in vogue at present, and figure B illustrates a bodice of bottle green satin. Beginning at the belt on each side the front are two tucks over an inch in width with a narrow tuck between. These pass over the shoulder and end at the belt in the back. A box pleated band with three little tucks in its centre extends down the middle of the back and front. This band is bordered in front with a tiny knife-pleated ruffle.

A square yoke in both front and back has five tiny tucks on each side of a central band. The yoke is bordered with a tuck and across its front are three cord loops on each side buttoning to mustard colored buttons on each side. A tiny rosette of mustard color is set in front of the stock, and from this stand out two short, full ends bordered with mustard.

Two wide tucks trim the length of the sleeve from the shoulder down the front and back outer portion. Between the two wide tucks down the front is one a fourth of an inch wide and between those in a group of three tiny tucks. An attractive panel down the centre of the sleeves is bordered by a tuck about a quarter of an inch in width, and is filled in with six tiny tucks that extend from the shoulder to the elbow.

The sleeve is gathered into a turned-up cuff which is fastened across the back by loops and buttons similar to those on the yoke. This cuff hangs loose over an under cuff of mustard color showing a green border.

This bodice is gathered to a belt and finished with a skirt piece to the hips. It fastens under a front band and can be worn with a corselet skirt or with an ordinary skirt finished with a wide belt or girdle.

Both this model and the striped one may be prettily made in wool with a braid or silk finish and in crepe de chine with a [illegible] finish.

A Type of the Separate Bodice.

The bodice is built over a fitted lining of white silk, which extends to below the waist. It has a stock and V front of transparent white lace, and a narrow, turned back coat collar and a [illegible] fold that [illegible] a point in front of the V. The [illegible] side crosses over to the left and fastens there in a [illegible] under a large button embroidered in pale shades of grayish mauve.

In the back is an unusually shaped yoke, which extends down the shoulders and upon the upper portions of the sleeves. To this yoke piece the fronts are gathered near the [illegible] and are sewed on plain the rest of the way. The entire yoke and armhole seams, except directly under the arm, are piped.

A seam extends down the back of the bodice, and at the bottom this is finished with a box pleat having a wide pleat on each side of it. These fit loosely and are tucked over the top of a wide girdle of the same satin.

The fronts are cut in a round shape and are pleated in three pleats on each side the bottom, making the bodice quite full over the bust. Where the bolero fronts are cut away they show a panel of satin set over the lining. All around the edges the bolero is exquisitely embroidered in grayish mauve, tinting to ash color, the flat floral design widening towards the bottom of the fronts. An upturned cuff is piped all around and opens in the back, where its edges are sewed to the puff of the three-quarter sleeve. This cuff is embroidered with the same design, in wider pattern, that decorates the bolero.

It is of crepe-de-Chine, with a high stock and shallow, round yoke of point lace. The top of the stock is appliqued upon a double fold of white satin ribbon. Around the yoke is a shaped border of silk edged with silk braid over a fourth of an inch in width. This band is trimmed with raised stars of silk embroidery set about an inch apart. Three graduated rows of fancy silk braid are sewed down each side the front, the longest strap in the centre, and each one tipped by an embroidered star. The front of the bodice is trimmed with six large buttons embroidered with stars. The blouse is given a bolero effect by means of two rows of the silk fancy braid set a little distance apart. These pass over the shoulders, cross the blouse under the arms and run up each side the back. This bolero outline of fancy braid is crossed by straps of the ribbed silk braid in a sort of ladder effect. Along the edges of this ladder effect, and sprinkled in the spaces and upon the bars are embroidered stars, making an effective yet simple decoration. A strap trimmed with stars crosses the top of the sleeve and three stars are grouped where this joins the ladder decoration. There are three straps of fancy braid, of unequal lengths down the back, each tipped with a star.

Full sleeves are gathered on the shoulder and also beneath a very open turned-up cuff, which has an upper and lower edge of fancy braid, starred and crossed by straps of the other braid. This cuff opens over one which sets more closely to the arm. This is a puff of point lace above a fitted cuff of the same. The bottom of the blouse is just full enough to make it puff out a bit above a wide belt, thus carrying out the bolero idea suggested by the ladders of braid.

Waists of any other material may be made up in the same fashion, and the bolero outline can be achieved by means of folds, little ruches and other devices, where braid cannot be conveniently procured.

An Example in Rose Satin.

Rose colored satin is the material employed in building the pretty separate blouse shown in figure E. This is a pretty style in which to make a suit bodice of cloth, or any other dress material.

This bodice has a stock and small round yoke of very open transparent lace. At the top this is sewed down along the middle of a very wide, heavy rose colored silk braid. At the bottom it is caught under a fold of satin which shows, beneath the lace, satin extending above the folds on the side and giving a pointed effect to the round lace yoke. Another bias fold is set around the waist, with heavy braid between. Each fold is trimmed with small embroidered figures and with a cord of embroidery along the edges.

A front panel is formed of two loosely hanging pieces of braid tipped with dangling ornaments, silk knots and olives. At the top a fancy shaped tab is cut out of satin, bordered with two rows of outline embroidery, decorated with little figures between, and with floral designs of the same character, and larger size in the open spaces of the tab. A forward turning pleat on each side this front panel is stitched along the edges. Down the centre of each side is a wide, loose box pleat, stitched part of the way down. A feature of these pleats is that they are stitched on each side, beginning at the top nearly half an inch from the edge, and having the stitching run out to the edge in a point. A pleat laid over each shoulder is stitched in the same fashion, wide on the shoulder and slanting down in a point midway on each side the front and back. A wide strap is stitched over the under-arm seams, being sewed on so as to have the appearance of being tucked on each edge. Over the top of the armhole the material is cut in seven small square tabs and these are stitched down upon a wide piece of braid.

Around the full sleeve is a wide band of satin, tucked so that the tucks stand out from the sleeves. Below this hangs a puff of lace, lined with chiffon and having braid sewed around the middle of it with a loop on the outer side. A band of braid around the arm trims a lower cuff of fitted lace.

The wide girdle is built of three rows of satin folds alternating with two rows of braid, all narrowing at the side. Where the waist fastens in the back the satin bands terminate in scallops.

Crepe-de-Chine promises to be much worn as a material for separate bodices, while satins and semi-soft silks are very evident in these popular articles of apparel.

Bias folds are very much in vogue for trimming purposes and save a lot of worry where it is difficult to match a gown with trimming and one cannot easily have trimming dyed to suit.

It is the custom now to have lace and other trimmings dyed to match the color of the gown with which they will be worn, but where one lives far away from dyeing establishments and fashionable shops the useful decorations wrought in folds, shirrings, pleatings and ruchings are greatly appreciated.

Some of the most attractive of the suit bodices could not truly be termed bodices at all. They represent plastrons, panels, folds and surplice pieces arranged in princess or girdled empire style over a lace or chiffon blouse. Often the lace and chiffon are merely introduced in the open spaces left by the dress material and all are tacked to a fitted lining, while having the appearance of being separate garments. Some very smart effects are produced by building portions of the bodice and sleeves of embroidered cloth or decorated velvet bands and panels, which repeat the decorations employed upon the skirt. Contrasting with these heavier portions of velvet or cloth are both fitted and draped pieces of diaphanous material.

For trimming purposes in cases where lace is not dyed to match the color of a gown, the fashionable colors are yellow and what is termed "string color." White and cream laces are of course much used, but only where the coloring just mentioned would not look as well.

WHAT MEN DISLIKE IN GIRLS.

MEN dislike a self opinionated girl. Not that they object to the opinions ex[illegible], [illegible] the ideal woman must be [illegible] willing to be instantly con[illegible] her [illegible].

Men object to a cold girl, or one whose [illegible] than the impression of [illegible] [illegible] a cold girl! The most beautiful [illegible] ceases to be attractive to the [illegible] lover when he begins to suspect [illegible]

Men—at least those whose opinions are worth anything dislike the girl who is the least bit rapid in her manner or speech. They may talk to her, flirt with her, perhaps, but in their hearts they dislike her.

Men are far from fond of the untidy girl. The girl whose buttons are for ever coming off, whose hair is always ill dressed and who [illegible] wears a half finished air never finds favor in their sight. A dainty freshness possesses a potent charm for the masculine [illegible]. He cares little [illegible] of the gown may be of the year before last's fashion, so that it fits perfectly, and all the little details of the toilet, especially boots and gloves, be above reproach.

Men object to the affected girl, the girl who is forever pretending to be something she is not. Such a transparent pretence as it invariably is, too, deceives no one.

"UNCLE POLLEXFEN'S at the bottom of this."

And shortly afterward he said aloud:

"Well, I'm dashed."

His eyes had grown accustomed to the gloom, and he gradually perceived that he was in a cabin, and that the circle of faint light was a porthole. He thought of Mary Pollexfen, far off in another London, with intense and violent longing. And he thought of the Courier and Lord Nasing expecting the wonderful "copy" which he was to provide.

From time to time he made efforts to free himself—in vain.

He heard a key turn in a lock. The door of the cabin opened. A lighted match came into the cabin, followed by a man. Philip's eyes blinked. The man approached a hanging lamp, carefully and deliberately lit it, blew out the match, dropped it on the floor and turned to examine the prisoner. It was the man of No. 7 Cotton street, the man who [illegible] him, who had lured him, [illegible] the yacht.

Philip gave no sign, though his brain was working at a high rate of speed. His [illegible] always served him well in a [illegible]. He had fully grasped the futility of any kind of protest, and he was determined to wait. The man, with an air of cheerfulness and interest, bent over the bunk on which Philip lay.

Then he picked up a black bonnet which was lying near, put it on, gave a twist to his mouth and winked. The sudden resemblance to Mrs. Upottery was too remarkable to leave any doubt in Philip's mind. He was [illegible] and helpless in the presence of [illegible] Pollexfen, that protean being who [illegible] unrecognized in his proper person [illegible] the extraordinary drama of [illegible] Corner House.

"[illegible] thanks for the three half-crowns. I managed it somewhat better this time," said the man softly.

"Why?" Philip curtly asked. It struck him that the man had changed completely. He now spoke with a highly cultivated accent, in a tone that was even more than [illegible]. If indeed he was Mary's uncle, Mary's lovely voice was not the first of its sort in her family.

"The insensibility business," answered the man. "A few days ago I thought my hand had lost its cunning. It needs a blow of just sufficient strength, neither too strong nor too feeble, in just the right place."

"Are you Walter Pollexfen?" Philip asked, ignoring these observations.

"Mr. Masters," said the man, "I have come to satisfy your legitimate curiosity. I am Walter Pollexfen. We have had the pleasure of meeting several times already."

He smiled vaguely.

"I wish you'd unfasten these ropes," Philip said. "You've not been quite nice to me, you know."

Mr. Pollexfen responded: "There is a French proverb about the [illegible] of putting one's finger between the tree and its bark. You committed that indiscretion. It is ridiculous to gird against the consequences of having flown in the face of a proverb, my dear sir. However, I am willing to release you. [illegible] me direct your attention to [illegible] and this knife." He drew [illegible] Philip's penknife from his own pockets. "I will release your legs, then your left arm and then your right. Having done that, I shall retreat [illegible] to the opposite corner of the cabin and [illegible] of the [illegible] think you will be translated direct to Heaven. I mention this because I have an objection to your jiu jitsu tricks. It was a lamentable fault in my programme that while I was in Yokohama I neglected to study jiu jitsu myself. Do you understand what I have said?"

"Perfectly," said Philip. "Go ahead."

"Your manners please me," Pollexfen remarked as he cut the cord.

"I can't return the compliment," said Philip.

In another moment he was free, while Pollexfen stood at the opposite end of the cabin, the revolver in one hand and the penknife in the other. He wondered whether it would be better to make a dash at the scoundrel instantly, or to await events. Having reflected upon Pollexfen's previous exploits, and upon the kind of person that the hero of them must necessarily be, he decided that in all the circumstances it would be better to await events.

"Perhaps," he ventured, stretching and twisting his legs and rubbing his wrists, "you'll explain what's the meaning of this foolery with me. It looks to me as much like a theatrical display as anything."

"Certainly I will tell you," replied Pollexfen. "Have I not said that I am here to satisfy your legitimate curiosity. As for the present scene, it is in fact rather like a theatrical display. You see I am a theatrical person—kindly lie down on that bunk—and I've had no one to talk to intimately for a long time, long time. I feel the need of talking to some one, the need of boasting, if you will. It's in my nature. It's in the nature of most great men. And I suppose you'll not deny, seeing how much you yourself have discovered about me, that I am a great man. Besides, you deserve that your audacious curiosity should be appeased. I might have killed you at once——"

"It surprises me that you didn't," Philip put in. "A murder or so more or less, especially when one has murdered one's own brother——"

"I'm bound to tell you," said Pollexfen, "that I didn't morally murder my brother. I only meant to stun him. Unhappily, I hit too hard—and there the old chap was, dead at my feet."

"What did you hit him with?"

"This," said Pollexfen, putting penknife and cord in his pocket and drawing therefrom a small, pear shaped bag inclosed in a long, narrow net. "It contains a mixture of the smallest shot and silver sand. Shot alone would be too heavy, and sand would not be heavy enough in such a small quantity. It's an instrument of attack affected by the hooligans of Lima, where I met with it—on the back of my neck. I daresay you feel a slight soreness at the back of your neck."

"I do."

"Just so. I can assure you I was very awkwardly placed with my brother's corpse. No doubt every one thought the affair a miracle of prearrangement. It wasn't. But if I am not equal to emergencies I am nothing. I never embark on any difficult enterprise without a ladder of silk rope. I changed into male attire. Then I decended by means of that ladder from my brother's room into Little Girdlers Alley, and I reconnoitered. The watchman was my first annoyance. I chatted with him and found out all about his domestic affairs. I then went up into Holburn, discovered a naughty boy at a coffee stall in Theobald's Road and persuaded him that there was an excellent practical joke to be played on that watchman. The joke worked to perfection, except that you came along and spoiled the desired effect. However, you went to sleep. Then I wanted a spade. There was a spade propped up against your cabin. I adopted it. I dug a neat thing in graves. Then I climbed back to my brother's room, and lowered him gently to the ground and followed after. As soon as he was buried I put the spade back, and revisited the trench just as that idiot of a policeman came up. I was back in the house in no time. The affair seemed to me rather distinguished both in conception and in execution. What do you think?"

The man spoke in such easy unaffected tones that Philip, do what he could, could not retain the ordinary human attitude towards what could only be called, if English words were to retain their common meaning, a dastardly crime.

"I think you succeeded by mere chance," he said coldly and nonchalantly. Sweat broke out on his brow and he knew it not.

"You don't express yourself [illegible]," Pollexfen protested. "You [illegible] ought to mean, that I succeeded by masterly use of chance."

"It's all very well to say that the affair was an accident," said Philip. "I have my own ideas about that."

"You doubt me, my dear sir?" Pollexfen seemed surprised and hurt.

"If it was an accident how came you to drug young Meredith on the very night that the accident occurred?"

"Oh!" exclaimed Pollexfen, "I see what you are running your head against. That was quite another matter. I did not understand young Meredith, as you call that charming person. But I had my suspicions. Young Meredith had behaved for several days in a way that I did not at all care for, so I determined to investigate the case of young Meredith, and for that purpose I caused a drug to be employed. However I was so fully occupied during the night that I had no opportunity to profit by the effect of the drug till morning, and even then I was hurried. Still, I accomplished enough."

"You accomplished too much," Philip replied.

"How so?"

"You lifted the blind of Meredith's room at a moment when I was watching from the street. It was just that that started me in my investigation."

"Then I certainly accomplished too much—for your ultimate welfare, Mr. Masters." He appeared to reflect. "Nevertheless the fact remains both interesting and instructive. I ought not to have given way to my curiosity so far as to lift that blind. Did I lift it in a peculiar manner?"

"You lifted as a man who has killed his own brother might have been expected to lift it." Philip answered coolly. And he thought: "My ultimate welfare! What the deuce does he mean?"

"Excellent young man," said Pollexfen, waving the revolver with a didactic gesture. "As a philosopher you have already attained to no mean proficiency. But you have something to learn. The absurd conventional emphasis which you put on the phrase 'own brother' convinces me that you have something to learn. One does not choose one's relatives. Forgive this platitude. But one does not. One owes nothing to one's brother. One's brother is a mere hazard of life—of no logical consequence whatever. My brother was one man. I was another. Hence fratricide is no worse and no better (save in exceptional instances) than ordinary homicide. In truth, just as there is no Allah but Allah, so there is no [illegible] but homicide. In the peculiar example of homicide now before us, I did a kindness to my brother. I claim no virtue for that—it was an accident. My brother was old, feeble, embittered. He had no friends. He had quarreled with even his daughter. He was about to voyage in an enterprise in which he would assuredly have failed. He would have lost all his money in it. His last day would have been unspeakably sad. An accident—my clumsiness—saved him all that. And you would like to see me hanged for what I did! You astound me. You shock me. Let me tell you—"

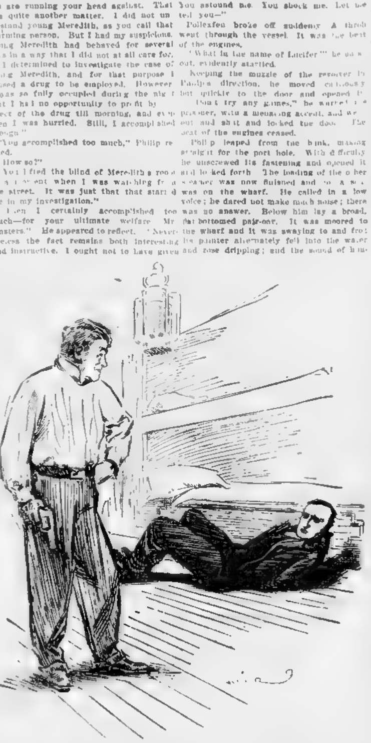
Pollexfen broke off suddenly. A throb went through the vessel. It was the beat of the engines.

"What in the name of Lucifer!" he cried out, evidently startled.

Keeping the muzzle of the revolver in Philip's direction, he moved cautiously but quickly to the door and opened it.

"Don't try any games," he warned the prisoner, with a menacing accent, and went out and shut and locked the door. The beat of the engines ceased.

Philip leaped from the bunk, making straight for the port hole. With difficulty he unscrewed its fastening and opened it and looked forth. The loading of the other steamer was now finished and not a soul was on the wharf. He called in a low voice; he dared not make much noise; there was no answer. Below him lay a broad, flat bottomed pair-oar. It was moored to the wharf and it was swaying to and fro; its painter alternately fell into the water and rose dripping; and the sound of hundreds of drops pattering on the black surface of the river each time the painter rose was strangely clear and uncanny in the night.



"HOWEVER, I AM WILLING TO RELEASE YOU."

A notion came to Philip.

He examined his pockets. They had been emptied. He searched the cabin for suitable material, and found nothing but a salver that was reared up on the top of the mahogany erection by the bunk. He opened the mahogany erection, which in a space of three cubic feet contained with its drawers and apertures and taps and basins and books the conveniences of an entire house. He cursed, as philosophers will, in their moments of frustration. And then, while staring at the interior of an empty drawer (lined with newspaper) he perceived that the screw of the brass knob projected through the front of the drawer and was secured on the inside by a nut. He detached the knob, and with the sharp screw-end of it he began to scratch a message on the salver. He was interrupted by a knock at the door.

He rushed again to the port hole and tried to put the salver through it. But as its circumference was greater than the circumference of the port hole, immutable Euclid was against him. In a frenzy of rage he bent the salver across his knee. It would just slip through the hole. He let it fall into the boat, and it descended softly on to the neatly coiled tiller ropes.

The knock was repeated.

Making no answer Philip rapidly fastened the porthole.

"I say!" The voice was Pollexfen's. "Are you lying on the bunk?"

"No, I'm not."

"Well, kindly lie down on the bunk. I'm coming in."

Philip obeyed. By stretching out his hand he could screw the knob home in its drawer.

"I'm on the bunk," said he.

"Well, on the whole I shan't trust you." There was silence. Then Philip heard a boring of an instrument in the door, and presently an inch wide gouge came through at the height of a man's eye and was withdrawn. An eye took the place of the gouge, and roved over the cabin.

"When I say I'm on the bunk I'm on the bunk," Philip observed.

"So I see," answered Pollexfen. "But I preferred to see."

He re-entered, making prominent the revolver.

"To resume," he said.

CHAPTER XXII.
The Compact.

"WHAT are you leading up to?" Philip asked. "That's what I want to know."

"To resume," said Pollexfen, ignoring this definite question. "I got the information that I required out of the late captain's pockets. It was quite as good as I expected, and it quite confirmed my view that he could not have used it successfully himself. I now had various matters to attend to all at once. I had to pretend to be ill, for reasons of discretion. And your unfortunate discovery made of that tooth out of my comb made it necessary for me to appear at the inquest. I think my appearance at the inquest was rather masterly, don't you, Mr. Masters? In the pleasure it gave me it rivalled my finest triumphs at the Britannia, Hoxton and Ford's Opera House in Denver. It was, not to exaggerate, immense. You may be interested to know that the captain knew who I was before he died. I had an interview with him in his room, stormy, in fact, pugilistic. The comb must have got broken then. I had meant simply to steal the few trifling documents that I needed, but I failed in that. The captain was too suspicious; hence the ultimate altercation. Of course, it ended badly for the captain. Then, besides, having to pretend to be ill and to go to the inquest and to superintend his funeral, I had my marine arrangements to perfect and complete. And then, to worry me still further, I began to have my doubts about myself; I found out the identity of the youth Meredith—the chit resembles her uncle in certain points of character; and to cap it all I was compelled to waste precious time in dealing with Mr. Varcoe."

Philip gave a start before he could control himself.

"I see I am beginning to excite you now," Pollexfen observed with an agreeable and ironic smile. "Admit it."

Masters was conscious of a feeling hardly to be differentiated from terror. And yet Pollexfen talked so easily, so naturally, with such an undeniable charm of manner, that his listener could scarcely comprehend his own mental disturbance.

"Let me see," Pollexfen said reflectively. "To-day is Monday. This makes the third day. Yes. . . . All London will know to-night where Varcoe is. Mr. Varcoe is a very able man conceited, over-confident, but able. He made all his preparations, and he meant to strike with a single blow, like Kitchener at Omdurman. He was guilty of only one mistake. He thought I didn't suspect him. Whereas the contrary was the case. So that when he entered my room for the battle of Omdurman I was waiting behind the door with my little instrument, and the battle occurred differently. You asked me where he is. Well, on the day of my arrival at the Corner House I was obliged to find a hiding place for male attire and other details, and I took up the floor, loosening the nails under the bed. Nothing is simpler to a man who has been in all trades, from navvying to treasure seeking, including naturally that of a carpenter, to arrange nail heads where nails have been in a way to escape detection even under a close scrutiny. I could lift and replace the planks of the floor in a moment. I had quite a wardrobe down there. Behold the reason why you and your little friend found nothing when you feloniously searched my chamber that night. Don't deny it—don't attempt to deny it—I saw at once you had been on the prowl." He laughed quietly.

"I am not denying it," Philip put in.

"Good! I should have put the Captain under the floor and left London on the morning after his death; but he was unhappily too fat. And moreover his weight might have sent him through the ceiling of the room below, which would have been awkward! These objections did not apply to the rising detective, Mr. Varcoe, who was slight and thin. He lies in repose under the floor of that room, wedged in between two rafters. His rest will be interrupted . . . the laws of the decomposition of animal matter . . . you see?"

"It's astounding!" Philip burst out utterly revolted by the detailed confession to which he was obliged to listen, and which indeed fascinated him, though as a snake is said to fascinate a bird.

"Yes, isn't it?" said Pollexfen with gentle enthusiasm. "It is astounding. When I think of the skill, the presence of mind, the sheer nerve, which were required for the whole operation, even I am amazed. I have a certain regret in bringing Mr. Varcoe's career to a close. But it was a purely sentimental regret, caused by his talents, and somewhat unworthy of me. Of course, when a man becomes a detective, to be killed is part of his trade. The risks, if not as great as the risks run by a miner or a hunter, or a President of the United States, are considerable. Detectives know that quite well. It's fair. In this particular instance Mr. Varcoe wanted to get a person named Billington to put me to a violent death, accompanied by every circumstance of shame. I objected, and the inevitable outcome of my objection was Mr. Varcoe's own decease. I——"

"You may talk till you're black in the face," Philip interrupted the actor. "You know what I think. You've simply no regard for human life at all."

Jan and Gurtruida in "The Golden Goblin."

THIS is to introduce to you a new boy and girl—Jan and Gurtruida, the hero and heroine of one of the most exciting and amusing adventures in any of the handsome Christmas books now stacked up in the windows and on the tables of the book shops.

The book is called "The Golden Goblin," and literary people are saying that it is unique because it represents the first effort in prose and verse and colored pictures to utilize the fascinating old legend of "The Flying Dutchman" in a children's book.

The scene is the wide Indian Ocean, upon its surface and among the fabled creatures in strange caverns below the waves—with the Phantom Ship and its ghostly crew ever in the forefront of the enchantment.

Jan and Gertruida, quaint little Dutch playmates, refusing to be separated when the ship foundered that was carrying them home to Holland, are discovered in mid-ocean on a little raft. The sea is calm, its surface being only slightly ruffled by white caps, when the children awaken at dawn after their first night on the raft. The white caps seem to them like flocks of lambs gamboling. Then they see their shepherd, a larger one, wrapped in a mantle of foam, which dances fantastically over the waves right up to the raft and is astonished at what he sees.

"Oh!" exclaimed Gurtruida, drawing back.

"Swish swash, burst my bubbles!" exclaimed the strange figure. "Is it possible that you two are alive?"

"Indeed we are," said Gurtruida. "But but, excuse me, would you mind telling me who you are, sir?"

"Who am I? Well, burst my bubbles! Ah, I see you are landlubbers. That accounts for it. I am Master Spray. All the wide oceans are my playground, and when the waves try to reach the sky I dance upon every crest and beat them down again. I am Master Spray and Neptune is my Lord." * * * *

"Thank you Master Spray," said Jan. "If you are continuing in our direction we shall be very grateful."

"Yes," added Gurtruida eagerly. "We have a long way to go, and you are so very clever."

"Burst my bubbles!" Master Spray swept the veil of foam from his face and the children saw that his merry eyes were wide with astonishment. "Do you mean to tell me," he added presently, "that you expect to reach land safely on that little raft?"

"Why not?" said Jan, rising to his full height, and putting his arm protectingly about Gurtruida. "We have ample food and water, a compass and a stout mast and sail." * * * *

For several moments Master Spray could only gaze upon the children and request his bubbles to explode, which they kept on doing with great brilliancy. Finally he said to Jan:

"But suppose the little girl should die of fright?"

"Oh," answered Gurtruida quickly, "I am never afraid when I am with dear Jan."

"Burst my bubbles! And you, my fine fellow? Does your courage never fail you?"

"If it were not for Gurtruida, sir," answered Jan, frankly, "I would be the most wretched coward in the world. But how could I be a coward before dear Gurtruida?"

Master Spray put his hands on his hips, and his shoulders shook until the outlines of his figure could not be seen for the myriad bubbles that danced about him. At length he swept the foam from his face and said:

"Bravo, my children! I cannot go with you, for I have other duties, but now and then our paths will cross. And as I have the gift of prophecy, I will reassure you at once. Before you see your distant home again you will have the most marvellous experience that ever fell to the lot of human beings. Often you will seem to be in deadly danger, but fear not. Remember the prophecy of Master Spray: In the end you will return safely and happily to your home."

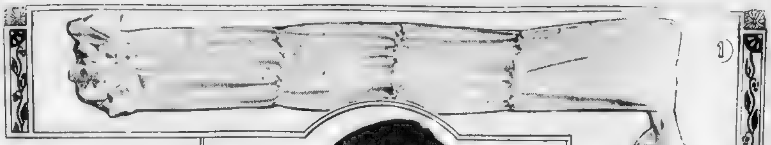
"Oh, thank you, Master Spray!" exclaimed Gurtruida, impulsively. "We will not forget, and we will watch for you always."

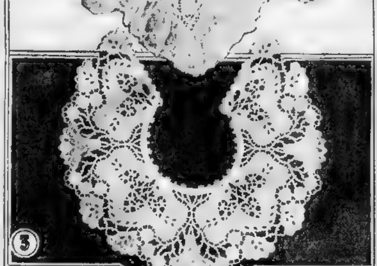
"At present," replied the fantastic figure, with a sweep of his hand toward the West, "you had best watch that sail over there. Lower your own sail, so that it may overtake you. For the present, farewell."

Gazing in the direction indicated by Master Spray, Jan and Gurtruida saw plainly in the moonlight the sails of a large vessel, and its bow was toward them. When they turned to bid godspeed to their fantastic friend he was far away, speeding over the waves, with his mantle of foam wide spread to the breeze. * * *

This was the children's introduction to the phantom ship, which was soon to take them aboard, where a mutiny had started, and start them on their series of wonderful adventures—written by Curtis Dunham, author of "Two in a Zoo," illustrated in the best style of George F. Kerr in several colors, and published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company.

What Is Nicest and Newest in Dress Accessories for Both Young and Old.





THE best made gown in the world may be made to appear wholly unattractive and commonplace unless those little accessories which complete the toilette of every well dressed woman and child are entirely in keeping with it.

On the other hand, a very simple and inexpensive dress may be given cachet and charm by the knowledge of just what accessories should be worn with it.

Children, for instance, require numberless articles of attire. These cannot always be fine of fabric, but they may always be built simply and neatly, and the addition of a nice hair ribbon, attractively tied, a pretty collar of good quality, and neat hosiery and shoes, gives the little one an air of being well dressed, however inexpensive her frock may be.

Belts are of especial importance this season, since upon them depends the character of the blouse or bodice worn with them. Wide belts and girdles prevail upon practically all gowns, and these are made with a round waist line, which sometimes curves just a trifle over the front. The old fashioned high-pointed belts are quite obsolete.

An excellent model for making high, round belts is shown in figure 1. This is boned in front, on each side and at each end under the hooks which fasten in the back. The soft, careless knots are also quite attractive. This style of belt may be shirred, as in the illustration; or bias material may be laid in folds or pleats of any width one pleases, but invariably turned upward, or wide ribbon may be basted together with upward turning folds and a finish of one or more ribbon rosettes in the back.

Satin is the most popular material for belts and girdles because it clings softly to the figure without the sharp creases to be found in taffeta. Soft taffetas and French faille also make up into attractive belts. These, especially the satin ones, are to be seen in use with every variety of dress and waist material.

It is the fad to finish off girdles with a row of prim little bows, sometimes with jewelled buckles and buttons in the middle; with triangular loops, decorated in the same fashion, and with twisted ribbon, in the shape of buckles decorated with little bows. Large, flat rosettes, soft knots and various lengths of sash ends all contribute to the finish of the ever present girdle.

In very dressy gowns gold and silver tissues, with roses of the same, are made into girdles, and jewelled girdles, with long ends hanging down the front, are to be seen with handsome tea gowns and reception dresses.

Combs for the hair have been almost abandoned by the well-coiffeured woman, except in cases where the comb seems a necessity, in which case it is concealed by a shower of curls. Well-dressed hair is considered its own chief adornment and jewelled ornaments are worn where they will add to the elaboration of the coiffeur, but not in such profusion as to distract from the lustre of the hair itself.

Together with roses of gold, of silver, and of velvet; spangled pompons, and airy inhabitants of the air, fashioned of gauze and jewels, one finds the charming and becoming wreath for the hair.

Small rosebuds hidden among spangled mistletoe leaves are [illegible] the small wreath shown in figure 5. [illegible] these types of wreaths are [illegible] and [illegible] way disguise the soft [illegible] and [illegible] elaborately dressed hair. A [illegible] to the debutante [illegible] though they may [illegible] worn by older women.

It is customary to wear [illegible] garniture of the same style [illegible] worn in the hair, and these blossoms are [illegible] frequently repeated in some decoration [illegible] skirt of the gown.

The pretty fashion of wearing shoes to match a gown [illegible] more exacting than ever. To [illegible] stimulate this whim of fashion, shoes of [illegible] are made in all the prevailing colors and also of patent leather, with suede and cloth tops in color and buttons either of the same color, of black or of tinted [illegible] ball shape.

Spats of calfskin are also to be had instead of the cloth spats with which we are all familiar. Calfskin shoes and spats, in fancy colors, may be easily cleaned by washing them off with water and [illegible] mixed in equal parts.

Colored heels are in vogue, and these show contrasting edges of white or black to correspond with a similar edge upon the top of the low shoe.

Novel effects in [illegible] say shoes and slippers for the house are sought after, and the soft kid, [illegible] or satin is cut into odd shapes and [illegible] with tiny beads, jet and [illegible]. Appliqued effects are also very smart, the appliqued design [illegible] down along the edges and also [illegible] with tiny beads and lines of [illegible]. Ribbon embroideries and [illegible] in coarse silks have quite [illegible] of style upon smart shoes.

Women who cannot afford the good [illegible] of [illegible] and cannot obtain their [illegible] ready made spats [illegible] or [illegible] a piece of the [illegible] or buy half a [illegible] of close serge or cloth to match it, to the shoemaker, and have a smart pair of spats made at very trifling cost. The highest price charged for this work is only $2.50.

It is worth while going to any degree of trouble to obtain the [illegible] effect imparted by elegance in the [illegible] of shoes, gloves, neckwear and belts, to say nothing of the evening [illegible] hat and [illegible]

Bolero effects obtain in everything now, and a very charming style in which to make a [illegible] corset cover is shown in figure 4. Any woman can make this [illegible] garment, whose arrangement of fitted skirt piece to [illegible] a loose top makes it well adapted to wear [illegible]

HOW TO PAY FOR YOUR HOUSE BY WHAT YOU WASTE IN YOUR HOUSEHOLD.—No. 2.

By MAY IRWIN.

ONE of the [illegible] in the household and [illegible] as much can be thrown [illegible] as can be brought into the house [illegible] marketing and shopping.

The new housekeeper, or the careless housekeeper, buys without much thought or any, and follows vagrant impulse rather than stern mathematical judgment. When a woman buys household furnishings or clothing for herself she should first ask herself the question "Can I afford it?" Second, "Is it appropriate for the use to which I shall put it?" Last, "How long can I use it?" These three questions cover well the entire ground of shopping. The woman whose allowance for household expenses is $50 a month cannot afford to give a dinner that [illegible] $20. And if her husband earns $25 a week she cannot afford a $15 hat [illegible] she waits until late in the season, when it may be reduced to $5.

The question of appropriateness enters largely into the matter of economy, for if a woman who can afford to make mistakes in shopping—and there are few such—should choose a rug of an unsuitable color for the room for which it was intended, she gives it to some one or puts it away and forgets it until some housecleaning contingency reminds her that she has it. The woman who goes shopping should cultivate her memory. It is as susceptible of training as any other faculty. She must learn to remember colors, be able to revive a vivid mental image of them, so that if she loses the sample for matching, or has not provided herself with one, she will not choose a rug that uses profanity at the wall paper. "How long can I use it?" is a practical question upon which a fourth or a half of the yearly income may depend. A woman may waste half her husband's salary by buying furniture that breaks and clothing that fades or spots. By her shopping she may keep him a poor man all his life.

If I were beginning housekeeping on a limited salary I would buy only what I had to have, not what I wanted. For instance, if I were furnishing a bedroom, I would look to it that the bed was a good, comfortable one. I should not buy an inferior bed because I was determined to fill my bedroom with a bureau or dresser, a dressing table and three chairs, simply because these articles are customary. I would first buy the good bed, and durable bed clothing. Then, if necessary, I would dress at the mirror in the parlor, keep my clothes in a trunk, and bring a chair from another room when I needed it. I would furnish the bedroom gradually, as my purse and my needs were equal. I would see to it that my rooms were papered in [illegible] would not soon fade. I had a bedroom that was papered with white watered silk paper, with blue panels, that was as fresh after two years' use as the day it was put upon the walls. In the selection of rugs I would keep the shades of my wall paper in mind and I would select a [illegible] harmonize with, if it did not [illegible] the wall paper. Light shades wore [illegible] than dark and figured designs [illegible] I would not have a carpet in my [illegible] I nearly have a spasm when I see [illegible] tapping an impatient foot on the [illegible] for the cloud of germs he is stirring up with the dust are visible [illegible] mind's eye. I have gone to bed afterward and dreamed that I was dancing a death dance with fifty million pink and purple microbes. For her health's sake, and that of her family, one should not buy carpets. Or if one insists upon the carpets, one should never have them cleaned on the floor.

If I were fitting up a house on the limited income I spoke of I should buy dark, simple furniture with severe lines. Its simple lines and dark colors show well against almost any background. The price is reasonable, and the effects are always good.

From this little home I should [illegible] net or cheap lace curtains. White liberty silk makes dainty curtains that launder well and wear for a long time.

In the kitchen more than almost anywhere else the rule of "Buy a few good things instead of a lot of cheap ones" applies. Buy good strong kitchen utensils and use them carefully, and there is no reason why you shouldn't use them well along in their second decade. I have kitchen pans that have been in use for sixteen years. So of table and bed linen. Better get something strong and durable at three times the price than for a third the price get shoddy things that you will have to renew twice while the others are wearing out.

Having bought judiciously, the next important point is to take care of the things you have bought. If your rugs are fine ones, of long nap, clean them as you would a velvet gown [illegible] rubbing with a soft fur [illegible] brush the wrong way. If you brushed the right way—that is, with the nap—you would rub the dust in. If the rugs are of short nap, and only ordinarily soiled, I would beat and brush them in the back yard or on the roof, in the good old fashioned way. Have a good supply of brushes for your upholstered furniture. Some of the brushes are of the softest texture and some are made of pointed shape, so that the buttons and the space around them can be cleaned. A good furniture oil and a woolen cloth, often renewed, will keep your furniture in good condition. For hardwood floors, [illegible] clean and shellac varnish them as [illegible] new.

Net or lace curtains should be soaked for at least twenty-four hours, being put through five or six waters. Then suds should be poured over them. Don't put soap directly on the curtains. They should be washed by dousing up and down in the suds, as French and Spanish women wash their clothes in the brooks in primitive places, getting them marvellously clean. Never use a washboard for lace or net curtains. Dry them on a stretcher in [illegible]

Moths don't get into clean clothing or furniture, especially if it is [illegible] I [illegible] of [illegible] rather [illegible] for [illegible] goods.

When you prepare for your Summer vacation [illegible] forget the rugs and [illegible] [illegible] hanging [illegible] Buy pretty [illegible] paper, even if your vacation is [illegible] of two weeks [illegible] and [illegible] with and [illegible] on the [illegible] the same [illegible] hang[illegible] own and [illegible] then put [illegible] open your [illegible] so that they [illegible] have a thorough [illegible] there is a motto of [illegible]

THE design shown here for a pretty shirt waist is one of the very newest effects, and is so simple in construction that almost any one can easily make it.

Blouse waists with open neck, disclosing the dainty white chemisette, are conspicuous this season, and are particularly stunning when made up in the rich Scotch plaids. The fronts lap in double breasted style and deep tucks at the shoulders give a graceful amount of fulness. The three-quarter length sleeves are rather original and lend an air of style to the mode. All the season's waistings are adaptable, such as Scotch flannel, Henrietta silk madras and linen. For 36 inch bust measure 2¾ yards of 36 inch wide material will be required.

The patterns for this shirt waist have been cut for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure and will be sent post paid by return mail for 10c. Fill in the blank below and mail, with 10 cents in silver or stamps to Now Science Has Found That Bread Contains Typhoid Fever Germs.

AT last scientific warnings against the typhoid fever germ have cast suspicion on the very staff of life—bread.

We have been warned against water, against milk, against all manner of raw vegetables, against raw oysters, and against ice—all of which have been proved to be easily accessible to and favorite lurking places of the deadly germ which produces typhoid.

Even the scientists themselves imagined that the bread we eat was immune and safe, owing to the high degree of heat required to bake it. But now comes Dr. E. Paller, of New York, writing in The Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette, who claims to have found in yeast, and also in the bread "raised" by that yeast, numerous disease germs, and particularly the bacillus coli communis.

Although wheat flour itself may not be sterile and free from germs, Dr. Paller declares that one brand of yeast cakes in general use is rarely free from harmful germs. He continues:

"Now, what is being done with the yeast? It is put into water and flour, and the whole is left in a warm place and allowed to ferment. That means that we encourage the bacteria to develop fully in the dough, and we encourage their toxins to fully develop and to saturate it.

"On examining microscopically after twelve hours the dough which has fermented by the addition of such yeast, I found it to contain the very microbes which were present in the yeast. The flour in itself, of course, is not sterile; but the evil is aggravated by the addition of a substance laden with bacteria.

"It will not be amiss to refer here to the claim made by some that yeast is an antiseptic, and, consequently, hinders the growth of bacteria.

"I shall briefly state that I have found by experiments that yeast hinders the development of some putrefactive germs in albuminous substances, but it does it to a very slight extent. Its antiseptic power, on the whole, is insignificant.

"The baking of the dough does not seem to destroy all the microbes, the heat probably not being strong enough or not continued long enough. As said before, I found bacteria in the pulp of fresh, warm bread just brought from the baker's.

"Even if the heat should destroy all the microbes it might not destroy the toxins that they have generated, nor does it correct the chemical changes that have occurred owing to the excessive bacterial development. The boiling of sour milk does not render it fit for consumption. The cooking of decomposed eggs, fish, or meat does not make them safe for ingestion.

"We have a rigid inspection of milk and other articles of diet; but our bread, the staple article, especially of the poor, has been entirely neglected. The bread looks to be such an innocent, harmless article that it has been left alone.

"I have no doubt that the many forms of the so-called fermentative dyspepsias and catarrhal conditions of the small intestines are in numerous instances caused by the consumption of contaminated bread. In people with normal gastric juice the injurious microbes are as a rule destroyed in the stomach. But even in them it is doubtful whether the toxins generated by microbes are neutralized by the gastric juice. Even in those whose stomachs are normal the injurious germs, or their toxins, will find opportunities to do harm, because a human stomach, even the best, frequently is not adequate to the performance of the heavy tasks that are imposed on it."

Dr. Paller declares it an easy [illegible] to manufacture yeast for breadmaking [illegible] a way that it cannot be contaminated by disease germs.

Chapter XXXV The Autobiography of Buster Brown

TIGE PLAYED THE ANDANTE FROM PAGLIACCI ON THE TRIANGLE

I WAS telling you how ma had wanted me to take music lessons, and how I had been trying to select an instrument that would be best suited to me. Well, I couldn't decide the first time I went to the music store, so I went again and tried some more instruments.

Of course "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast," but there's another thing that will soothe it, and that is kindness. But you can't play a tune on kindness, and I wanted to play.

I've given it up though, for it's too hard work to become a good musician. I know that it is hard work to become a good anything, but I'm more willing to work at some other things than music. I like the music, but I would rather some one else would make it.

THE BANJO ONLY MAKES A NOISE.

TIGE DIDN'T SEEM TO LIKE MY VIOLIN PLAYING AT ALL.

CHOPIN'S RHAPSODIE HONGROISE DIDN'T SEEM TO PLEASE ON THE FLUTE.

Music is a matter of taste—that is, good taste or bad taste. I think I have good taste in music, so I was not satisfied with the combination of noises I was able to make; neither was the music store man, and he told me I had better give it up. I did give it up for the time being, but when I get bigger and older I may take it up again.

Our National Crime—CHILD LABOR.

Copyright [illegible] Journal-Examiner

EVERY citizen is responsible for every national wrong, UNLESS HE IS DOING HIS BEST TO RIGHT THE WRONG.

The shame of this country is the destruction of childhood, the organized system of murder called CHILD LABOR. It is murder of the body as well as of the soul. More disgraceful than any black slavery, more shameful than any possible injustice to GROWN men, is this abuse of the children in the factories, the mills and the mines. The child of the black slave was allowed to GROW UP healthy and vigorous because it was worth to its owner two hundred dollars at birth.

But the white child slave CANNOT EVEN HAVE ITS YOUTH. It is worth nothing to anybody, EXCEPT TO THE NATION'S FUTURE, AND IN THOUSANDS OF FACTORIES AND MILLS THE WHITE CHILDREN ARE GROUND INTO MONEY—THE ONLY WAY OF GETTING MONEY OUT OF THEM.

* * *

Among those that oppose this newspaper—and they include every criminal employer of child labor and every Trust owner—a favorite cry is "Class Hatred."

An attack on a system which kills children by thousands is called, and will be called, "fomenting class hatred."

But those who read this newspaper and all the people of this country knew well how to distinguish between CLASS hatred AND HATRED OF INJUSTICE.

In the Congo, where the King of Belgium rules, they take the young child and cut off its right hand if the father and mother fail to bring in their allotted supply of rubber.

They cut off the THE CHILD'S hand because it is too young to pick rubber. They don't cut off the father's or the mother's hand; they NEED those hands for rubber picking.

The second year the child's second hand is cut off if the parents fail to bring the necessary amount of rubber, and then, among other results, THE CHILD BECOMES BLIND, BECAUSE IT HAS NO HANDS TO WIPE THE INSECTS OF THE TROPICS FROM ITS EYES.

But go down there and tell the truth, and you will be told by the agents of King Leopold THAT YOU ARE BREEDING CLASS HATRED, just as you are told by the agents of the glass factory or the mill in this country, when you attack the slow killing of children, that you are breeding class hatred.

We sincerely hope that it will be possible to breed the most intense hatred—a hatred that shall find vigorous expression at the polls—against every man who for a dollar sacrifices the life of a young child.

Mr. Edwin Markham, the man of feeling and genius who wrote "The Man with the Hoe," has taken up systematically the defence of the child slaves in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

In the Cosmopolitan for October there is this brief description of the factory slave:

> "It is nightfall when the long hours end and the children may return to the barracks they call home, often too tired to wait for the cheerless meal which the mother, also working in the factory, must cook after her factory-day is over. Frequently they snatch only a bite and curl up undressed on the bed."

Is not that a pretty picture of life in the greatest Republic, the richest nation that the world has ever seen?

In this same Cosmopolitan article Mr. Markham, who writes about the child-killing glass factory, has this:

> "The factory was bristling with cordons of barbed wire. Asked the reason of this hideous hedging, the superintendent blandly replied, 'It keeps the young imps here when we've got 'em in for the night shift.' Only one more turn of the screw would put chains on the legs again, as the Nottingham cotton manufacturers were wont to hold their runaways in England's obsolete factory infernos."

Had you asked the English child-killer years ago WHY he had chains on the legs of his little slaves, his reply would have been, "What are you up to? Are you trying to breed class hatred?"

If you had gone into the English coal mine, to see women, half naked, with chains around their necks, on their hands and knees, PULLING LOADED COAL CARS THROUGH LOW TUNNELS, you would have had the same answer had he expressed resentment

The work that Mr. Markham is doing in his systematic exposure of child labor in the Cosmopolitan Magazine is a noble one.

BUT THE CITIZENS OF THE COUNTRY HAVE GOT TO HELP IT. It won't do to read the article, or look at the pictures as you look on a play at the theatre, and then go away and do nothing.

You have got to feel this thing IN YOUR HEARTS; you have got to know that YOU as an individual in the nation are responsible for that child crying in the picture on this page

* * *

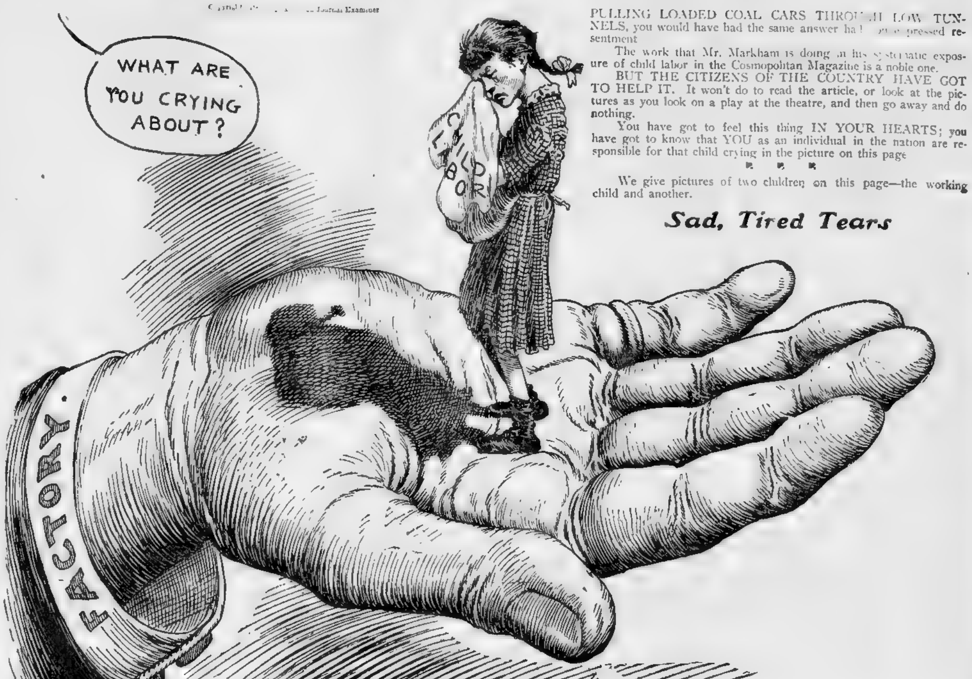
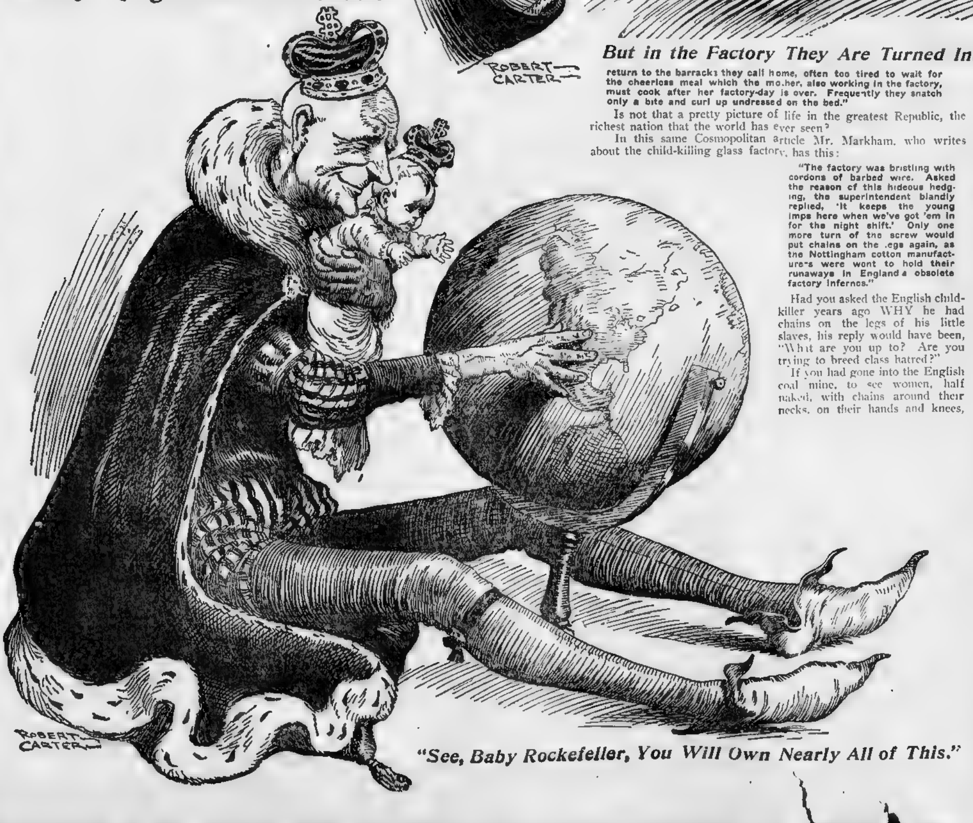
Sad, Tired Tears



But in the Factory They Are Turned Into Pure Gold, So What Does It Matter?

Money King to His Grandson



"See, Baby Rockefeller, You Will Own Nearly All of This."

Purposely we have made the picture of John D. Rockefeller and his grandson FANTASTIC.

Could anything be MORE fantastic than the reality?

This is a Republic. All are supposed to obey the law, all are supposed to have a chance, THE NATION'S WEALTH IS SUPPOSED TO BELONG TO THE NATION.

A REPUBLIC, with wealth absolutely unlimited, with possibilities unlimited, ACTUALLY PERMITS THE GRINDING TO DEATH OF TENS OF THOUSANDS OF MISERABLE CHILDREN.

And in that country you see the grandfather and the grandson on this page.

You see ONE MAN IN A REPUBLIC able to point on the globe to the nation in which he lives and say to his grandchild, "Nearly all of this belongs to me. ALL OF IT MAY BELONG TO YOU."

This grandfather can say to his grandchild, "In this country no man may engage in one great industry unless I say so, no man may engage in ANOTHER GREAT INDUSTRY unless I say so. And when I go, YOU will have this same power."

* * *

Have the citizens of the United States done their duty when on the one hand they see the children tortured, destroyed, and on the other hand one individual able to shut all citizens out of the avenues of prosperity which he controls; ABLE TO SAY TRUTHFULLY THAT NO MAN IN THE COUNTRY CAN ENGAGE IN CERTAIN LINES OF WORK UNLESS HE SAYS SO?

It is a queer, fantastic picture indeed that our Republic, GOVERNED BY TRUSTS, holds up to us.

The man with a crown on his head has more actual influence AMONG THOSE WHOM THE PEOPLE ELECT THAN ANY MILLION OF CITIZENS PUT TOGETHER

The great Trusts take your wealth, laugh at your laws

And smaller, equally criminal enterprises TAKE YOUR CHILDREN OR THE CHILDREN OF OTHER AMERICANS WHO OUGHT TO BE AS DEAR AS BROTHERS TO YOU AND GRIND THEM INTO MONEY

* * *

Have we got among us to-day ANY of the manhood possessed by our forefathers who established this Government?

Is it conceivable that men descending from those that declared THAT ALL MEN MUST BE FREE are willing to submit to tens of thousands of children being made slaves?

Were the men who gave up their lives to throw off "taxation without representation" really the forefathers of the men to-day who submit to being taxed without any representation or power of retaliation by this old crowned King of Money?

American citizens, you will not be doing your duty, you will not be worthy of the men that established this country for you, until you are able with your power to FREE THE SLAVE CHILDREN IN MILLS AND FACTORIES, until you are able to say to the Kings of Money, "You are not greater than the law; you shall OBEY the law."

THE REAL BEAUTY OF GIVING BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1906, by American-Journal-Examiner.

Whatsoever thou givest beside thyself is of no value in my sight,
For I seek not thy gifts, but thee. Offer up thyself,
And thy gifts shall be accepted.

I OPENED my Thomas a Kempis the other day to this verse, and it was a direct answer to a question which I had heard asked only a little while before.

A woman, who had been most generous with money to her relatives, was despondent because the giving had resulted in little seeming good. Those she had sought to benefit were not grateful, nor were they benefited by her generosity, taking what she gave, with little thought of her goodness and with little sense of responsibility in the receiving.

Like her, I had wondered why this should be, but at the same time I knew the woman had been generous from pride, rather than from love of her relatives; she had given because she knew they expected her to do so, knew that others thought her able to help her own, and that to refrain would brand her as close and miserly, and that poverty and ignorance of her relatives would reflect upon her.

But she has not given of herself, that is of her love, to those upon whom her money favors were bestowed. And so there was no value in the gifts.

Her dollars carried nothing with them, but their own hard, cold value, and they fell upon hard, cold ground, and so there was no harvest.

There is much such generosity in the world, and it is of little value to mankind.

Before you give anything to anybody read over the verse quoted above, and, unless you can give of yourself, or your love and sympathy, do not give your dollars and expect any benefit to others to result, or any happiness and satisfaction to yourself.

Neither here or hereafter will your giving be rewarded, for "thyself, not thy gifts, are of value."

Many a widow's mite has done more good in the world and brought greater results than millions flung down in frozen charity through a sense of obligation to the world's opinion.

There are fathers to-day who are wondering why their sons have proven so ungrateful, and why their wives are not happy, when a fortune has been expended upon them.

But they gave their gifts, not themselves.

Neither wife nor son felt the husband's and father's love and sympathy in what was bestowed.

Their bills were paid and they were supplied with life's luxuries, but the giver was not given with the gift.

It is the man who makes his wife and children realize how dear they are to him, and how precious with love and tenderness is every penny bestowed upon them, who reaps a rich harvest from his investments.

The Church, or public institution, builded from money which has been given from love of the world's approbation, not from utter and absolute love of God and humanity, will not benefit humanity or the giver.

The great creative power back of the universe wants us first and foremost; our sympathy, our love, our fellowship expressed toward one another; our faith, our trust, our service expressed in thought, and feeling, and act, day by day as we go through life.

Then, and then only, do our gifts count. "Offer up thyself and thy gifts shall be accepted."

One dollar given in the spirit of love absolute does more toward the regeneration of mankind than one million given through pride or love of approbation of men.

Only as we give of ourselves is any other gift of value.

Give. By Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

GIVE, and thou shalt receive. Give thoughts of cheer,
Of courage and success, to friend and stranger,
Strength will be sent thee in thy hour of danger.

Give words of comfort, of defence and hope
To mortals crushed by sorrow and by error,
And though thy feet through shadowy paths may grope,
Thou shalt not walk in loneliness or terror.

Gold rusts and shrivels in the hand that keeps it;
It grows in one that opens wide and free.

Give of thy love, nor wait to know the worth
Of what thou lovest, and ask no returning;
And wheresoe'er thy pathway leads on earth,
There thou shalt find the lamp of love-light burning.

"DURING these beautiful Indian Summer days," [illegible] said the Song Writer, "the heart of the [illegible] turns to thoughts of romance and [illegible]. You may smile, if you will, but I a[illegible] I, a hardened old bachelor, [illegible] of Nature's loveliness. Does not th[illegible] say:

[illegible] and that's no stall
[illegible] to the mouldering wall—
[illegible] dear, [illegible] I the woman call?

"[illegible] no use talking," continued the Song Writer. "I [illegible] get away from these songs of sorrow that I ha[illegible] putting across the plate lately—songs like 'It Was [illegible] Laundry That I Seen Her First.' They don't do no good."

"They bring you the money," I suggested.

"Money?" questioned the Song Writer. "What is money? A medium of exchange—a bunch of green and yellow slips that pave the way to nights of revelry. I am sick of it, drowned in it. As I was saying before the interruption came, these Indian Summer days suggest sentiment. I've got some corking good sentimental lyrics framed up, and I am going to put them on the market in a bunch, under the title, 'Songs of Girlhood.' Here are the titles of three of the songs: 'She Sank Beneath a Marcelle Wave and Never Rose No More,' 'I Cannot Wed a Barber, for I Always Shave Myself' and 'Beneath That Whalebone Corset a Heart Beats Fond and True.'"

The Song Writer paused and waited for my verdict.

"I can't say I like the sound of it," was my frank comment.

Visibly downcast, the Song Writer regarded me gloomily. "Then how about this?" he demanded.

"Quit shaking dice and come."

"Dear Heart, the Soup Bone's Waiting."

I.

"IN a lovely Greenville cottage in New Jersey far away
A fair young married woman watched the evening turning gray.
She was waiting for her husband to come and get his grub,
Which, by the way, the wife had earned by bending o'er a tub.
Down in her heart she knew full well the cause for the delay—
The minutes passed on feet of lead, the husband did not show,
And finally the worried wife did murmur soft and low:

CHORUS:

"'Dear heart, the soup bone's waiting—
'Tis growing thick and cold;
In case you come home skating,
Don't blame me if I scold.
Please pardon me for stating
That I am feeling glum;
Dear heart, the soup bone's waiting—
Quit shaking dice, and come!'"

II.

"At last the erring husband had purchased all he could,
His ready cash had vanished, and his credit wasn't good.
He trod the heaving sidewalk, he reached his home a grouch,
And found his loving helpmate unconscious on a couch.
The awful truth burst on him! In anguish he did groan!
She had choked upon that soup bone she tried to eat alone!
Long years have passed since that sad day, his happiness has fled
Each time he sees a dice box now he thinks of what she said:

CHORUS:

"'Dear heart, the soup bone's waiting,' etc."

Mirandy on Thanksgiving Day. By Dorothy Dix.

Copyright, 1906, by American-Journal-Examiner.

"HIT'S a mighty good thing," observed Mirandy, "dat de President 'pints a day ev'y year for us to lay off an' to [illegible] thankful for de good luck dat has come our way, becaze ef he didn't do hit, an' we didn't have to be thankful by law, de mos' of us wouldn't be thankful at all.

"You would think dat folks dat had been fairly well and had enough vittals to eat endurin' de year would be jest sloshin' over wid gratitude, but dey ain't. Instead of thinkin' on deir mercies dey is settin' up prognosticatin' 'bout deir misfortunes an not bein' one of dese heah champeen strong men, an' ain't had pie for breakfast ev'y day.

"Yassum, we all measures ourselves up aginst de rich an' de prosperous instid of de po' an' de onfortunate when we wants to know whar we stands on de grateful platform, an' dat's de reason dat our blessin's has such a po' shrunk look to 'em dat we don't think dat dey is worth [illegible].

"Ev'y time I segashuates down de street I meets up wid a woman dat backs me up in a sto' do' whilst she tells me 'bout how she's got a misery in her back, an' a kind of gone feelin' in de pit of her stomach, an' de rheumatics in her legs, an' one of dese heah sort of all overs in her system, an' de doctor say dat he speks she's got de chronics but none of de able-bodied, spry women dat ain't got an ache nor a pain in deir whole circumference don't stop me to tell me how healthy dey is, an' how good hit is to be well an' strong.

"An' 'bout fo' evenin's a week some sister camps in my parlor rockin' cheer an' sprinkles my bes' rug wid her tears whilst she tells me how she is married to a [illegible] dat spends his money an' his time a-chasin' after odder women, an' comes home drunk an' beats her an' de chillen, an' breaks up de furniture dat she is done took in washin' to buy. But ef any of de women in my acquaintance is ever took up any of my time a-braggin' 'bout how dey is married to a man dat works like a dray horse so [illegible] kin have time to traipse around an' [illegible] wid de neighbors, an' who gits up of [illegible] an' walks de baby wid de colic, an' [illegible] hand dem no back talk when dey git [illegible], den I disremembers de occasion.

"Likewise I don't hear nothin' [illegible] parients dat is got good an' beautif[illegible], but, my Lawd, de howl dat goes up from [illegible] dat has to pay deir boys' [illegible] allnboose an' take any sass from a highstrung daughter!

"Which is what makes me say [illegible] dat we takes our blessin's as [illegible] our due dat we ain't got no call t[illegible], seein' as dey ain't never come up to our expectations noway, but we lets out a mighty squeal when any little thing goes wrong wid us.

"Yit wese all got a-plenty to be thankful for, even ef hit ain't nothin' but not bein' worse off dan we is.

"Yassum, dat's so, an' dat's wh[illegible] tellin' Tom Johnsing dis mawnin' [illegible] him on de road comin' up [illegible] stopped me to say as how dey is got twins at his house, an dat hit sho'ly is hard luck on a man dat's already got forty-leven chillen to have two more mouths to [illegible].

"Be thankful for your [illegible] I [illegible] hit mought a-been triplets.'

"An' dat's de way [illegible] things, but we don't. W[illegible] over all de days dat we [illegible] when hit rained or [illegible] lot of folks gits togedder dey axes each odder ef dey remembers de blizzard in January, but dere ain't narry [illegible] dat pipes up 'bout de spell of good weather in May when hit warn't neider too hot nor too cold, nor too dry nor too wet. An' dat's jest de way hit is 'bout life. Our troubles sticks in our recollection lak a burr on a dog's tail, but our blessin's slides out of our minds lak water off a duck's back.

"But ef you averages things up dere ain't mo' rain dan sun, an' we don't have no mo' bad luck dan we does good, an' dat's de reason I dont let nothin' hinder me from keepin' Thanksgivin' day, dough I mos'ly has to keep hit by myself, for all de folks dat I knows is so busy workin' overtime worryin' over deir troubles dat dey ain't got no leisure to spend on considerin' deir blessin's. Yit ev'ythin' is in the way dat you looks at hit.

"Now dere's Brer Mose Hoskins, what is always a-moanin' an' a-groanin' becaze he has to work a-totin' bricks in a hod.

"'What is I got to be thankful for?' he axes me.

"'Shoo,' I says, 'you sho'ly is one of de favored of the Lawd, for youse got a steady job. Ef you didn't have no work, an' couldn't git none, den you might talk, but any man dat's got somethin' to do, an' de sense to do hit, dat'll make him a livin' ought to be blessin' his stars for his luck.'

"An' dere's Sis Almiry, dat is ole an' po' now, but dat is done seen better days when she lived in her own house, an' des rolled in grease. 'I sho'ly ain't got no call to keep Thanksgivin',' she says to me, but I 'spons:

"'Dat you is, honey, for you done had things. Mos' of us ain't got, an' never expects to have de good things dat you is enjoyed, an' hit suttinly does look lak youse got a mean spirit ef you can't be grateful for dem favors what is past and gone. Moreover, you is got what can't be taken away from you—de recollection of de fun you is had.'

"An' dere's Sis Sally Sue, what is married to one of dese heah men what's a good man, but he ain't got no faculty for gittin' along, an' dey has a mighty hard scuffle to live, an' hit gits on Sally Sue's nerves.

"'I lay,' says she, 'dat de President's proclamation don't hit me none, for all dat prosperity dat he talks 'bout overflowin' de country sho'ly has passed by my do', an' ef I was to comb things wid a fine tooth comb round my house, I wouldn't find nothin' to be grateful for.'

"'Sis Sally Sue,' says I, 'in dese days ev'y woman dat is married to a man dat ain't got no turn for makin' money is got reason to be down on her narrow bones a-givin' thanks to God for keepin' her husband for her, for de very fust thing dat a man does dat gits rich is to git him a new wife wid a straight front figger an' a yaller pompadour.

"'Now, des as long as yo' Jeems Henry has to come to you for a nickel to get chawin' tobacco, he is yours, an' you ain't nowise in no danger losin' him, but ef he was to git to be a millunaire lak dese white folks does he would be des lak em, an' de fust news you knows is dat he would be gittin' a divorce to marry a actor lady.'

"Well, Sis Mirandy,' dey all says, 'we don't see why you is so set on celebratin' Thanksgivin' day. You ain't so lucky. You is po', an' hard worked, an' has had a mighty scramble to raise yo' fambly, an' we notices dat in yo' basket dere ain't no turkey, nor even a chicken. Dere ain't nothin' but pork chops. What you gwine to give thanks for?'

"'Humph,' 'spons I, 'I'se gwine to give thanks dat feathers don't grow on pork chops, an' dat you don't have to pick 'em.'"

"Dere's Brer Mose Hoskins, what is always a-moanin' an' a-groanin' becaze he has to work a-totin' bricks in a hod."

Music, Girls and Color, Features of Week.

MUSIC is the chief feature among the new things at the theatres this week. Two great musical pieces, full of life, color and pretty girls, come here for the first time. "His Honor the Mayor," which has had a phenomenal run in New York, comes to the Boston Theatre, and "The Belle of Mayfair," during whose run in London Edna May and Camille Clifford had their little "flare-up," opens at the Colonial. "As Ye Sow," last season's big Boston success, returns to the Globe, and Barney Gilmore, in "A Rocky Road to Dublin," comes to the Grand Opera House.

The three stock companies change their bills, John Craig's players delving again into farce with "The Young Mrs. Winthrop," the Castle Square company picturing Rome and Nero in "Quo Vadis," while the Bowdoin Square actors present another melodrama, "The Slaves of Sin." Four of the greatest dramatic successes of recent years are now running in Boston and continue here over the coming week. "Peter Pan" is to have a special matinee at the Hollis Street Theatre on Friday next. Belasco's newest masterpiece, "The Rose of the Rancho," has but seven more performances at the Majestic; Francis Wilson, in "The Mountain Climber," remains at the Park, and the George Ade success, "The College Widow," is renewing old friendships at the Tremont. Keith's Theatre, the Orpheum and all the variety houses offer new bills, and the week will be one of the busiest of the season.

Boston Theatre

Fast in the wake of "The Social Whirl" and "Mamselle Sallie," two of the season's musical comedy successes, at the Boston Theatre, comes "His Honor, the Mayor," which will open a fortnight's engagement there to-morrow evening. By all accounts it is the smartest, swiftest and sauciest, if not the most tuneful, of the trio, and the newspaper reviewers in New York City, where it ran all last Summer, declared it to be "the greatest musical comedy since 'Florodora.'" One reviewer said that it "takes a twentieth century pace the moment the curtain rings up and retains it to the close, when the safety valves are applied and everyone takes a long breath." The play will be produced with the identical scenic equipment here as there and by the original New York company of a hundred people, with a chorus of sixty and a cast headed by Harry Kelly, with John H. Pratt, the celebrated baritone, Clarence Harvey, Fletcher Norton, Harry Stuart, John S. Muray, E. R. Richards, Lora Lieb, Marion Alexander, Lois Tabor and Katherine Tanner. The fact that Julian Edwards and Alfred E. Aarons wrote the music of "His Honor, the Mayor," puts it in a class by itself. A novel feature will be the dancing of Aarons' English "ponies." There will be Wednesday and Saturday matinees and a special Thanksgiving Day matinee.

Colonial Theatre

Teeming with melody and mirth, and abundant in costly costumes and handsome scenery, "The Belle of Mayfair," a new musical play that was pronounced in London to be the most attractive opera of the year, begins a two-weeks' engagement at the Colonial Theatre Monday night. The play is by Chas. H. E. Brookfield and Cosmo Hamilton, with the music by Leslie Stuart, whose "School Girl" and "Florodora" are still remembered. The production is under the personal direction of Thomas W. Ryley, who was responsible for "Florodora." "The Belle of Mayfair" is in two acts, the first of which shows a bazar in a private park in London, and the second showing the drawing room in Sir John Chaldicott's house, Mayfair. An idyllic love story that is easy to follow runs throughout, ending happily with a wedding in St. George's. Christie MacDonald, daughter-in-law of the late Joseph Jefferson, will appear as Julia, the part created and until recently played in London by Edna May. Irene Bentley will have the part of the Princess Carl and Van Rensselaer Wheeler will be the ardent lover. As a beauty show the chorus stands alone both in the matter of good looks and beautiful costumes.

Globe Theatre

Last season the Rev. John Synder's drama, "As Ye Sow," had a phenomenal run of ten weeks at the Majestic theatre and Managers William A. Brady and Joseph R. Grismer promised to bring it back again as soon as they could find it possible. Its marvelous success, however, would not permit of its return until this season. It will open to-morrow afternoon at the Globe Theatre for an engagement positively limited to two weeks. With the exception of Walter E. Perkins, as "Dave Ledyard," the cast is about the same as during the celebrated run here last season. The investiture remains the same. The character of "Samson," the town crier, has been made absolutely true to life. Mr. Grismer on visiting Cape Cod last Summer discovered that the town criers were not darkies and consequently substituted a white crier in the piece, the character of which is identically like that of a famous "town crier" of one of the popular resorts on the Cape and who will be instantly recognized by members of the Summer colony there.

To-morrow night a valuable souvenir will be presented to every lady who has a numbered seat at that performance. The usual Monday, Wednesday and Saturday matinees will be given.

Keith's Theatre

One of the principal events at Keith's this week will be the Boston debut of Tom Edwards, the great English ventriloquial comedian, whose success in New York has been phenomenal. The impression he made is not one whit behind that created by Arthur Prince. Emma Carus, who is soon to make her appearance in a new musical comedy, will pay Boston a farewell visit as a vaudevillian. Macy, Hall and company, in the droll rural comedietta, "The Magpie and the Jay," are another feature. The list of foreign acts will include the Hungarian Boys' Band, the Four Harveys, on the wire; Lee Tung Foo, the Chinese baritone, and Marzella and Millay on the horizontal bar. Lee Harrison, the monologist; Byron and Langdon, violinist and songstress; Horace Wright, delineator of old characters; Jennings and Renfew, who write the comic songs they sing; the Three Madcaps, acrobatic soubrettes; Mr. and Mrs. Jack, in a Merry farcelet, and the Kinetograph will round out the programme.

Orpheum Theatre

Manager Williams makes a novel departure from the usual attractions this week in introducing as one of the features a violin recital by Kocian, the Bohemian violinist, whose only tour in America was made a few years ago. His appearances at the Orpheum this week will make him acquainted with an immense public, and the interest shown in his engagement by musicians indicate that musical Boston will find its way to the Orpheum. Another notable feature will be the first appearance here of Harry Tate with his London comedy company in the sketch, "Fishing." Grace Cameron, who will be remembered as in "Piff Paff Pouff," the Cotterell Powells from the New York Hippodrome, Jack Norworth, from Lew Fields's Theatre, James Donlan and Ida Latour in "The High Toned Burglar," Jewell's Manikins, Adolf Zink, the diminutive comedian, the three Dillon brothers, comedy acrobats, and new vitagraph pictures complete the attraction.

Majestic Theatre

At the Majestic Theatre to-morrow night "The Rose of the Rancho," the newest and most beautiful of David Belasco's productions, will begin its second and last week of the Boston engagement. From here the play will go directly to New York to begin a long run at the Belasco Theatre and "The Girl of the Golden West," which is playing there now will then come to the Majestic. "The Rose of the Rancho" has been unanimously conceded to be, by all odds, the most beautiful production ever made by this master of stage-craft. He has succeeded in catching and transferring to the stage the very atmosphere of Spanish California, the land of warm sunshine and indolence. The pleasant surprise of the production has been the "arrival" of Miss Frances Starr, who is hereafter to be reckoned as one of America's foremost leading women. She scored a success which is almost without an equal, all things considered. Indeed the entire cast scored individual hits. Among the most prominent are Charles Richman, Hamilton Revelle, Frank Losee, William Elliott, John W. Cope, J. Harry Benrimo, Frank Westerton, Gilmore Scott, Grace Gaylor Clark, Jane Cowl and Maria Davis.

Tremont Theatre

Fascinating in its spontaneity and simplicity—exciting from its first moment to its last—creating liveliest attention and interest, "The College Widow" is back with us again at the Tremont Theatre, the scene of her last year's triumph, and enjoying another sure, substantial success.

The football scene, showing in striking fidelity an eager, jostling, boisterous grand stand of people, is a triumph in stage craft. The faculty reception in the gymnasium is replete with irresistibly funny touches of nature, while the wild celebration of the local team's victory in the final act caps the climax. It is a play of American types, and much depends upon the personality of the individuals impersonating the different roles. Nearly every member of this organization, which includes several who were in the original production, has had from one to two years practical experience and personal success in his or her particular role.

Bijou Theatre

"Young Mrs. Winthrop," that delightful comedy drama of Bronson Howard, comes to the Bijou this week. A number of years ago, when the Madison Square Theatre was at the zenith of its popularity, "Young Mrs. Winthrop" was produced, and it stands at the head of their list of successes. "Young Mrs. Winthrop" tells a strong, consistent story of domestic life. The play is written in Mr. Howard's finest vein. As a resident of New York he is thoroughly familiar with life in the Metropolis and the way he has depicted his characters as they live and move in the "smart" set makes a thoroughly interesting study. Some of the most notable actors and actresses of the present day have played in "Young Mrs. Winthrop" and for the Bijou patrons there is a delightful treat in store.

Castle Square Theatre

Triumph of Christianity over Paganism is the theme of "Quo Vadis," which is to hold the Castle Square stage during the coming week. A dramatization of Sienkiewicz's famous novel, it brings to the eye the Rome of Nero's time, and its successive scenes picture with astonishing realism events that have a distinct dramatic and emotional significance. "Quo Vadis" is divided into seven tableaux, representing successively a public grove near Rome, the palace of Nero and the house of Vicinius, a public highway, a prison and the great Roman amphitheatre. Nero himself appears in the play, and he is surrounded by a group of characters that in their picturesque Roman costumes give color and romanticism to the plot. The cast will include Howell Hansel as Vicinius, Charles Miller as Petronius, Louis Albion as Nero, Ben Johnson as Chilonides, Elfreda Lasche as Eunice, Frances Brandt as Pomponia and Thais Lawton as Lygia.

Park Theatre

The final performances of "The Mountain Climber" by Francis Wilson and his splendid company will begin to-morrow night at the Park. Laughing crowds have thronged the theatre during the past three weeks and have thoroughly enjoyed the delightful comedy methods of Mr. Wilson as Montague Sibsey, and the complications in which he becomes involved through the deception of his wife. The authors have provided a splendid story and have introduced many entertaining characters, admirably enacted by May Robson, Joseph Brennan, Edna Bruns, Ellen Mortimer and Joseph Allen. There will be but one matinee this week and that on Saturday.

Hollis Street Theatre

For the first time in all her visits to Boston, Maude Adams has acceded to a general request for a special extra matinee. The demand for seats for "Peter Pan," now that the play is in the last weeks of its Boston engagement, has become so great and so many letters have been written to Miss Adams by those unable to obtain any seats at all, that it has been decided that there shall be a special matinee at the Hollis Street Theatre next Friday afternoon, November 23. In addition to this extra performance, there will be the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees during the coming fifth week of "Peter Pan's" Boston season. The seats for all the performances are now on sale at the theatre box office. The welcome accorded to "Peter Pan" during its stay in Boston has surpassed every possible expectation. The receipts are of a size unparalleled in the history of the theatre.

Grand Opera House

Barney Gilmore has made a big hit in his new play, "A Rocky Road to Dublin," a three-act comedy drama by Daniel L. Hart, author of "The Parish Priest," which will be presented for the first time here at the Grand Opera House to-morrow night and continuing all the week. All plays dealing with Ireland and Irishmen give fine opportunities. Mr. Gilmore is possessed of a natural singing voice and has un[illegible] ability as an actor. During the performance he introduces fine songs and [illegible]. A capable cast surrounds him, among them being Hugh Cameron, Arthur F. Sprague, Will Long, John O. Griffen, Patrick Touhey, Eva Myrl Lewis, [illegible] Maynard, Hansha Bishop, Mamie [illegible] Laird and little Emma [illegible]. [illegible] scenes are new and not the least [illegible] is a genuine Irish jaunting car and a [re]alistic Irish picnic. Matinees will be given on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Howard Athenaeum

There is no need of taking liver pills or paying a doctor a fee for melancholia, nervous prostration or depression. Just laugh, is the remedy, and that remedy is at the Old Howard. There, this week, Holcombe, Curtis and company have an act, entitled "A Winter's Session," which they claim will take Boston by storm. Mlle. Victoria's performing dogs, including the highest leaping greyhounds on earth; dainty Laura Ordway, who has hundreds of friends here; the Three D'Elmar Brothers, comedy acrobatic jumpers; Seeker, Wilkes and company, in a novelty dance; Whalen and West in "Walk With Me"; Charles T. Lewis and [illegible] Thompson, in an Irish dancing act; the Cuban Nightingales, Bohee and Hyers, the Dwyers, singers and dancers; Raymond and Norton's novelty lady athletes and sword experts; Butler Havlland, author of "Papa Is Always Doing It," are all in the bill. "Going Some" is the title of the piece the burlesquers will [illegible].

Bowdoin Square Theatre

"Slaves of Sin" will be the offering this week at the Bowdoin Square Theatre. The dramatist takes as his background Marie Corelli's famous story "The Vendetta" and constructs a play that contains the [illegible] of all the good things in the novel. The great earthquake scene is produced, also picturesque Naples and the palaces of that historic city. The Bowdoin Square Stock Company will interpret "The Slaves of Sin" and Alexander Gaden and Miss Charlotte Hunt will assume the two leading roles. Others in the cast will be Wilmer Walter, Irving W[illegible]on, Ralph Brown, Edwin Denison, Dwight Gaylord, Harry Brooks, Frank Wright, Leonard Broughton, Gertrude Binley, Annette Marshall and Gracia Roberts.

Columbia Theatre

To-morrow afternoon at the Columbia the Colonial Belles and the Great Vulcan will occupy the stage. The Great Vulcan is said to surpass any of the modern giants in his herculean feats and is willing to try conclusions with any man in the world in weight lifting or feats of strength. In addition to his wonderful strength, Vulcan is said to be physically perfect. The two burlettas of the Colonial Belles will be found extremely exhilarating and lively. In the company are Charles Robinson, Lawrence and Edwards, Charles Falke and Misses Rose Carlin and Marie Richmond.

Palace Theatre

There is no brighter spoke in the burlesque wheel than that which bears the name of Fred Irwin's Big Show, which comes to the Palace Theatre this week. The ensemble will introduce two highly amusing skits entitled "The Only Pebble on the Beach" and "The Sultan's Wives." Both pieces will be staged with attractive settings and gorgeous costumes. The comedians are all funny fellows, while the girls are said to be the prettiest on the road this season. The olio will present Susan Fisher, a girl with a baritone voice; Bates and Ernst, the Buster Brown Maids, the Five Barrison sisters, and the famous Rastlebinders in their sensational singing and dancing act.

Lyceum Theatre

For the week commencing Monday the attraction will be the famous Rentz Santley Company. Among the galaxy of artists are Colton and Darrow, Marshall and King, Allen and Dalton, Wixon and Eaton, Charles Weber, comedy juggler, and the European importation, the Cycling Zanoras, introducing an entirely new conception of bicycling sensations, and the burlesque queens, Nina Bertolina, Jean Darrow, Marion Blake, Viola Van Urdiler and a bevy of twenty handsome show girls. Two new musical extravaganzas will be presented; the opening burletta, "Forty Minutes From the Bowery," [illegible] extravaganza is en[titled] [illegible] Wife," a breezy [illegible] the great dramatic success, "The Squaw Man."

Austin & Stone's Museum

The seventy five-pound pony Chiquita, smallest of the horse kind, will remain at Austin & Stone's another week as the star feature in "The Pony Circus." Lottie, one of the ponies, will also do seemingly impossible feats of discerning apparel, colors and numbers. Other features this week will be [illegible] educated baboons. Till's Marionettes [illegible] the largest snake in the world. The "Minstrel Maids" will bring forth a group of pretty girls, and in vaudeville there will be novelty acts by the Beatties, Butler and Lamar, Melrose and Elmer and James Rowland in illustrated songs.

What an Observer Saw at the Theatres

By Clement L. Pollock.

BOSTON with its New England quiet and conservative ways looks rather queer to the person who emerges from the Majestic Theatre after having seen Mr. Belasco's new play. For about three hours he has been living in the land of liquid-eyed senoritas and black-mustached senors with an occasional much-despised Gringo as an interloper. No more faithful living picture of Southern California at the time it was invaded by Americans sixty years ago could be put upon a stage. Not only is it a scenic triumph but somehow it would seem that the real atmosphere of the time and place had been preserved unbottled for this production. The Mexican mission with its padre, the sacred music of the [illegible], the light, languorous melodies twanged on guitars, the fantastic garb, the delicious Spanish accent, the to-morrow-to-morrow cry, when anything was to be done—all this brought into play by an unusually competent cast, with a stage-setting that is Mr. Belasco's masterpiece, makes the beholder live again in an epoch of the dead past. Frances Starr, the "Rose of the Rancho," is charmingly effective. She is the living embodiment of the impulsive, warm-hearted but fiery Spanish girl in every detail of her part. In the second act, where she turns on the young American and [illegible] him in a tabasco temper, she aroused the audience to an unusual fervor of enthusiasm. Miss Starr is certainly to be congratulated on her great success in this new and exceedingly difficult role. Many of the others in the cast were conspicuous for their excellent work.

* * *

THE marvelous versatility, power of impersonation and ability of an actor to make up were never shown in Boston in a more striking way than by E. S. Willard last week at the Colonial Theatre when he presented at the same performance "David Garrick" and "The Man Who Was." From the young, handsome and charming favorite of the Drury Lane Theatre to the old, unkempt, crazed and babbling once-member of the famous White Hussars, is a mighty leap. And yet this wonderful actor took it with such infinite fidelity that he carried with him an audience that pulsated with heart-happiness, only to transform it, as with an electric shock, into a huddled group with misery depicted on their blanched faces. It is one of those rare cases where art is supposed to predominate over heart—and I wondered how many there were in the closely packed house who were able to feel it in that way. Even at the sacrifice of an artistic conception I thought it would have been better to have transposed the two pieces and allowed the people to go home with the satisfactory ending of "David Garrick" in their minds rather than to dismiss them with the depressing and painful memory of "The Man Who Was" clinging to them.

* * *

I HOPE that some of those sad people who go to the theatre and then sit in their seats with that "I-dare-you-to-make-me-laugh" look settled on their faces were at Keith's last week, and sat through James J. Morton's little turn. Morton isn't one of the usual kind of monologue comedians who entertain us frequently at the variety theatres. But he is so ridiculous and "foolish" that he always stands out prominently on the bill, no matter what gallery of stars he may be found with. He has the rare ability to be simply absurd, and the audience continually screams for more. At Keith's last week, Morton followed an act that left a gloom over the theatre. It was a sort of pocket-edition tragedy. A moment after the final curtain descended on the hero, who had just stabbed his foe to death, on came Morton, with a lively introduction from the hard-working orchestra. Morton, who is a big, rotund six-footer, and was garbed in conventional afternoon attire, proceeded to explain just how the tragedy that preceded him was worked up. He produced the [illegible]-blade dagger which was manipulated so effectively in the assassination scene, and then quietly and seriously assured the audience that the man wasn't really dead at all. And that is one of Morton's peculiarities—helping out the others on the bill.

Seat Sale for Blanche Bates

At the Majestic Theatre to-morrow morning seats will go on sale for the engagement of Blanche Bates in "The Girl of the Golden West," which comes to Boston for a stay limited to two weeks, beginning November 26, with Saturday matinees only and a special matinee on Thanksgiving Day. "The Girl of the Golden West" is the play which David Belasco wrote of the stirring California days of '49, and which Miss Bates has been playing at the Belasco Theatre, New York. The company is identical with that which is now closing its long engagement at the Belasco Theatre, New York. The production and cast will be brought intact to Boston.

David Belasco HAS FOUND A NEW "Juliet"

WAIT AND SEE!

BY ELEANOR AMES.

FROM henceforth for evermore Boston will have a new and sweet significance to David Belasco.

It will serve to remind him of two important happenings, the scoring of another stage triumph and the discovery of a new actress.

Neither of these events possesses the charm of novelty, but both are satisfying to the man whose entire wonderful, busy life is given unreservedly to his work, and who counts no effort too great that brings success.

What did you read in that tender, slightly melancholy smile when on Tuesday night, at the Majestic Theatre, David Belasco, with his co-worker in the trumph Richard Walton Tully, and his newly discovered actress, Frances Starr, came before the curtain to acknowledge the storming applause of the public?

Something Greater Than Mere Passing Pleasing Pleasure

Not such gratification of ambition, not the haughty pride of the victor; not the smug satisfaction of a little soul inflated with vanity, but the honest gratitude of a great, broad, generous being who was glad to have succeeded where he had attempted, to have given pleasure and who wished not solitary grandeur in the limelight, but insisted on sharing his honors as he believed was deserving.

"I am glad you like 'The Rose of the Rancho.' Mr Tully and I wrote it together. But this little girl, not yet twenty, has played the 'Rose.'"

That was his spirit. Not "Ego," but "all of us."

In the world of dramatic art the name of David Belasco is one to inspire a feeling akin to reverence. He has taught us first, how to separate the wheat from the chaff and to want the wheat; to reject the shoddy and spurious and counterfeit and demand the genuine, the substantial, the real.

He has given harmony and naturalness and perfection of detail a new meaning.

He has sharpened our sensitiveness and made keen our perception.

And, through it all, he has preserved that grand strong simplicity which is the unmistakable hall mark of true greatness.

Belasco, a Genius. Eccentric?— No, But Genuine—Great!

In meeting a genius the everyday person has his eye "awake" for traces of eccentricity.

So when during the opening act of "The Rose of the Rancho," I was piloted behind the scenes, through a maze of singing Spanish cavaliers, hardy Nebraskans, coquettish Spanish maidens, hated "gringos," past the gaily caparisoned pony that brings his burden of lovely femininity to the betrothal party of Juanita, "La Rosa del Rancho," and Don Luis, through a long, dark, narrow lane of scenery, to a clear space, where sat on a stage rock an unpretentious looking man, with a boyish face, crowned by contradictory white hair, my sub-conscious self was searching for eccentricity.

And if simplicity, splendid, broad, true-hearted simplicity, be eccentricity I found it. Otherwise the search was in vain.

It was Thursday night. Since Tuesday's premiere, rehearsals and changes and new lines and new situations had succeeded each other to polish the ragged edges of the play and bring perfection nearer.

And that day Mr. Belasco had been held a prisoner in his apartments at the Touraine by the exquisite, brain-piercing tortures of neuralgia—which is the nearest approach to being in a state of nervous collapse to which he ever comes.

"I have expected this neuralgia for two weeks," he said in a tone of patient resignation. "It has been trying to get a grip on me, but I have succeeded in fighting it off until the play was produced. Then it got too strong for me."

"But the triumph of the play and the discovery of a new actress must mitigate the suffering some?" I suggested. He smiled and his face lighted with pleasure.

A Mere Child She Is, But Wait! Wait a Few Years

"I am delighted with that little girl," he said. "She has a great future. She is a marvellous little creature. Why, she's only a child, a mere child. Wait half a dozen years, and you shall see.

"I WILL SHOW YOU A 'JULIET' THEN.

"I don't want to crowd her. She must develop naturally and slowly. You must not force such art."

His voice, soft and pliant, thrilled with tender enthusiasm. The words were more caressing than laudatory. In such tone might a father speak happily of the daughter who had gained unusual proficiency at school. The boyish face was full of joy at the success of one in whom he had found that divine spark which he seemed to be so quick to recognize, so ready to appreciate, so anxious to develop.

"She is so full of temperament," he went on, "and yet so shy and modest and young. She has wonderful emotional power. Why just recall her force of acting and then remember she is not yet out of her teens, and weights but 108 pounds!

"It is marvellous!"

"Even to you, with all your experience?" I asked.

Belasco Evidently Believes He Has Found a Great Actress

"Perhaps because of the experience. I have been watching this little Frances Starr for two years. She surpasses my expectations. She will do wonderful things."

The soft, musical voice had grown lower, the eyes were fixed dreamily ahead, as though away beyond the vista of years he saw the full developed flower from the tender bud in whom so much hope is centred.

"How did you discover a great actress?" I asked. The question [illegible]

"I [illegible] I feel a spark of [illegible] thing which tells me 'here is genius,'" he says.

"People are merely instruments, and I want to reach out and touch their hearts and take their souls under [illegible]

"I feel I have found something which I can guide into expansion. I know that certain emotions must be fast asleep, certain passions unawakened. So I study the individual in a talk which brings out various emotions. In talking of oneself and one's hopes and fears and disappointments, and one's daily life, the entire gamut of emotions may be sounded.

The Story of How Belasco First Saw His Star

"I saw this little girl play in a stock company first. There was perhaps nothing apparently remarkable in her work. But I felt that she had a God-given talent.

"I AM RIGHT."

"She is a perfect little instrument, and responds truly and feelingly to every emotional note."

He clasped his hands nervously.

"What is the greatest essential for an actress?"

"Heart," he responded instantly, "heart and intelligence. But if I cannot have an equal quantity I can do with less intelligence and more heart. Heart and soul and fire. These are essentials. You must feel, and then make others feel.

Belasco Has Joy in His "Discovery's" Success

"It is joy to me to see how Miss Starr has walked right into the hearts of people. I knew her magnetism. I felt the vibration, the heart throb, but others are feeling it, too. It is beautiful to see the way in which the company has gathered her in. It proves the honesty of her heart.

"She does not feel that she has done anything. She looks big-eyed with surprise and gratitude to me and says: 'LOOK WHAT YOU HAVE DONE.'

"That is one reason why I have such faith in the future. She is simple. Simplicity is the keynote to greatness. The greater the MAN the simpler. True greatness does not need the [illegible] of [illegible]."

"Has the story of success ever grown stale?" I asked.

His face glowed, his voice ringing with earnestness.

"Never, never," he said. "To succeed now means just as much as it did when I was a small boy. Thirty, yes, forty years of work has not affected my enthusiasm.

"I have a greater interest in the last thing I do than I have ever had in anything before. When interest grows lukewarm and success an old story, then ambition must be weakening.

"When ambition weakens, beware. The fire is burning low. Every human being to keep his heart awake, his nerves alive, must have an unfulfilled ambition."

"And yours?" I asked eagerly.

Mr Belasco looked embarrassed. A slight flush spread over his face. "I don't like to say it," he confessed, "because other people have so often said the same thing.

"But my early training has never left me. I have always striven for the legitimate. In the old days the old plays by the old writers were done and done by actors trained by experience. I am wild to do the big strong, the standard plays with big people and in a big way.

"SOME DAY I WILL."

While we talked Mr Belasco did not forget the play nor the players before him. The slightest mistake on the part of the least of the latter would have been recognized. Long before "The Rose of the Rancho" was ever cast he had acted every part.

EVERY line of the piece is in his mind. EVERY gesture, EVERY inflection. "Many a time," said one of his closest associates, "have I sat on the doorsteps of his New York house, in the early morning hours, while on the pavement, with the night patrolman and myself for audience, he has enacted various scenes of the play in hand."

Everybody Seems to Wish Belasco Great Success

That is one reason for the universal Belasco triumph. Before the play passes out of his hands to the players, Mr. Belasco has lived through every character and every scene. As he writes he becomes the one of whom he is writing. And this faculty has become more or less diffused among his company. Each one knows the whole play, and the cues never come unexpected.

It has been Mr. Belasco's constant aim to create a new school of acting. It is the natural school, and this must not be confused with the school which struggles under the much abused term of realism.

"If it is necessary to cry, cry," declares Mr Belasco; "if you have to scream, then scream. If you need to repress, then repress—naturally."

In producing "The Rose of the Rancho" Mr Belasco confesses he has dipped into a most difficult period of history. The play is essentially American, and yet strongly influenced by Spain.

Everything had so much meaning in those days. The wearing of the flowers under one ear for a maiden, under the other for a matron; the language of flowers; the draping of a mantilla, all had special significance.

The scenery was not unfamiliar. Mr. Belasco is a born Californian. It is Mr. Tully's native home. Both are filled with the spirit and love of the country.

But California of to-day and the California of those days is not the same. For months one of Mr. Belasco's agents scoured Southern California for stage accessories and quaint stories of the life of yesterday.

A young artist, Albertine Wheeler, whose studies of Spanish life have already brought her fame, made the plates from which the costumes were created. And at the last, real Spanish blood was infused into the cast by the engagement of some capable Spanish actors.

"AND WHAT NEXT?" I asked Mr. Belasco.

"New England," he replied. "A real, true to life New England play, leaving out the well and the old oaken bucket, and the rube quartet and the ridiculous simpering old maid and a great deal of the hayseed. A play which shows the rigid simplicity of New England and gives the real estimate of New England character."

Mr Belasco declares that, first and foremost an actress must have temperament, and to temperament she must bring hard work. In both requirements he sets an example hard to achieve. He is all temperament. Hard work is his life. From 9 30 in the morning until midnight, he doesn't know the meaning of rest. In the night he gets up sometimes half a dozen times to write down thoughts that surge his brain. He lives literally on his nerves.

Belasco Is, Like Others, A Temperamental Absolutionist

And, like all temperamental people he equalizes his life by absorbing from others as much strength and vitality as he gives out so freely.

His manner and appearance are wholly untheatrical. Dressed invariably in black, with his high-buttoned vest, black tie and choker collar, he suggests the church more than the stage. His manner is gentle, unassuming, almost diffident. But withal you feel the tremendous, unspeakable force which makes for greatness.

LITTLE STORIES OF STAGE PEOPLE

Walter E. Perkins will have a hearty welcome back to Boston in the cast of "As Ye Sow" at the Globe Theatre. He has not been here since he was caught in San Francisco last Spring at the time of the great earthquake and fire. The tourists from Boston who saw him there at that time plan to give him a notable greeting. Being a telegrapher by profession before he went on to the stage, he was able to make himself of the greatest assistance to the government people who took charge of affairs.

* * *

Philip H. Lavine, business manager for John Craig at the Bijou Theatre, is the youngest business manager in the country. His promotion from the position of Mr. Craig's secretary, which he occupied for six years or more, was won by clear judgment, good executive ability and a genial personality. He is very popular with the fair patrons of the cosy theatre, and it is not merely because his hair is curly.

* * *

Pretty Virginia Milton of "The College Widow" company is a really, truly little Quaker girl, who is trying very hard to get over the practice of addressing her acquaintances as "thee" and "thou." This is Miss Milton's first year on the stage.

* * *

Several of the members of the Maude Adams Club of Dorchester went to see "Sir Anthony" at the Park Theatre Tuesday afternoon and did not know that they were near the young actress for whom their organization was named. They did not recognize her and it was not until the next day that they were told that Miss Adams had been seated within a few rows of them all the afternoon before and that she went out of the theatre almost side by side with them. It is evident that they were looking for the peaked cap which she wears in "Peter Pan."

* * *

May Robson would never be taken for a musical comedienne by those who see her work in "The Mountain Climber," but it was not so very long ago that she played here in "The Messenger Boy," the London musical success from the Gaiety, and she also appeared with Jerome Sykes in "The Billionaire."

* * *

At the American premier of "The Belle of Mayfair" in Rochester a fortnight ago two of the dramatic critics of the Flour City waxed enthusiastic over Miss Valeska Suratt, who appears as the Gibson girl. One wrote: "She looked like the real original Gibson girl, and her posings were a telling reproduction of the Gibson drawings." Another wrote: "Miss Suratt is one of the most beautiful women on the stage, and she posed the famous beauties of Mr. Gibson's studies with much charm."

* * *

It is not generally known that the kissable and much kissed Louise Forde of "The College Widow" company is a sister of Stanley Forde, the singer, and that Miss Forde, like her brother, possesses a highly trained voice, and before going on the stage she was a prominent church choir singer in Buffalo, N. Y.

* * *

Harry Kelly, the young comedian who has scored so remarkable a success in New York the past Summer in Alfred E. Aarons's production of the musical play, "His Honor the Mayor," has been on the stage since he was seven years old. He was for many years associated with his stepfather, John T. Kelly, so long a member of the Weber and Fields all star stock company.

* * *

Many [illegible] Eliot Theatre do not know that [illegible] MacDonald, who has become one of the most popular members of John Craig's company, is, in private life, the wife of Edward Wade, who has played at the Castle Square Theatre ever since the dramatic company has been organized. Mr and Mrs Wade have a very pretty home in Arlington and never allow any of the little rivalries which exist, naturally, between the two stock companies to disturb their peace of mind here.

* * *

Little Olive Wright, who so cleverly plays the child's part in "As Ye Sow," which will be presented at the Globe Theatre for the next two weeks, comes of a theatrical family. She has two little sisters who have been playing child parts on the stage this season. Her mother was a prominent child actress in her time.

* * *

Those who remember Miss Frances Starr as the pretty little ingenue of the Castle Square Stock Company will be surprised at the wonderful emotional power which she exhibits in the titular role of "The Rose of the Rancho." Miss Starr has scored one of the most remarkable hits in the history of the modern stage.

* * *

When Blanche Bates, as the star of "The Girl of the Golden West," comes to the Majestic Theatre for two weeks beginning November 26 local dialecticians will have before them a pleasant vista. Nothing in Miss Bates's impersonation of "the girl" has earned more genuine praise than her language. It is in a way the very life of the character, and probably more than anything else establishes the atmosphere in which the girl moved, breathed and had her being.

* * *

It is announced that Gertrude Quinlan of "The College Widow" company will probably be starred next season in a new [illegible]

With a [illegible] that vibrated through the whole block [illegible] the big Lafayette Hotel from foundation to roof and drove over 150 people [illegible] occupants pell mell [illegible] to the street for safety, a [illegible] in the J. W. Potter [illegible] repair shop exploded [illegible].

Like the booming of a [illegible] the [illegible] drew over 1,000 people in the vicinity. Police aid was summoned and the crowd rushed away to make room for the excited inmates who were piling out of the apartment hotel.

Three Stores Wrecked.

Three stores were wrecked, the J. W. Potter auto tire repair store at No. 118 Columbus avenue, the tailoring establishment of [illegible] and the [illegible] establishment of [illegible].

[illegible] was so slight that Joseph [illegible] plate glass windows in the [illegible] wrecked stores were [illegible] into [illegible] the glass was driven far out [illegible] around the sidewalk. Each of the windows was about eight feet long [illegible].

[illegible] features of the explosion [illegible] the framework [illegible] into pieces. Eight [illegible] glass windows in the rear of both stores were blown into a powder.

Havoc in Hotel Lafayette.

Havoc was wrecked in the big apartment house, the Lafayette, with a [illegible] were jarred from [illegible] and tables and crashed [illegible] pictures were [illegible] hangings on the wall [illegible] to the floor. On the hotel tables, crockery [illegible] held down was [illegible].

Fortunately [illegible] were passing in front [illegible] glass was flying. Several [illegible] in the near vicinity were startled and started on a mad dash for [illegible] they were [illegible] before any [illegible].

Investigation [illegible] and property owners immediately after the wreck [illegible] cause of the explosion [illegible] that either the vulcanizing machine was too highly charged with gas or spontaneous combustion caused the explosion.

Up through the ceiling of the Potter store went the machine as it soared from the force of the explosion. It ripped a big hole and landed back on the floor with a heavy thud.

Nobody was near it at the time which adds mystery [illegible]. It was in good working order and never had given any [illegible] trouble in handling it.

Eighteen families occupy apartments in the Lafayette [illegible] to the employes, over [illegible] people. With the boom and general [illegible] of all loose articles in their [illegible] the one thought of all was [illegible] for the staircase. In the [illegible] down the stairs, women and [illegible] tumbled over each other in their anxiety to get out.

It was estimated by proprietors of the three damaged stores and the hotel that the damage will total over $1,000.

FIRES AT AFRICAN DODGER, BUNCOED WITH STAGE MONEY

Matthew Gulliam, a Lithuanian who lives on Cross street, took three shots for a dime at an African dodger last night and to-day [illegible] Adams, colored, of No. 11 [illegible] street is in the Tombs on the charge of working a bunco game upon the unsuspecting foreigner.

In his own country Matthew has a reputation as a [illegible] game of skittles corresponding to the American game of baseball. In passing No. 42 Elliot street last night, he could not resist the temptation to try his skill on the grinning colored man behind the canvas screen.

Matthew took three shots for a dime and in change for a bill received a fine assortment of stage money and trading stamps. Matthew did not discover the hoax until he tried to pass some of the stage money.

He then made tracks for the Hanover Street station, told his story and Adams was arrested by a patrolman in a saloon near his home, getting rid of Matthew's real money.

TEMPERANCE LEADERS ANGRY AT INCIDENT

There is [illegible] brewing in temperance [illegible] society circles because of a remarkable episode at the World's W. C. T. On the stage of historic Tremont Temple, before temperance workers from all over the world, many of them the most distinguished members of their sex, a woman engaged in traffic which the W. C. T. Death of Brian Fish Causes Fear That Fate Has Marked Principals.

WILL BE BURIED MONDAY

Close on the heels of the death of Brian Fish, the sixth of the principals in the famous case of Charles L. Tucker, who was executed for the murder of Mabel Page, come weird tales from the servants of former Attorney General Herbert Parker at South Lancaster, to the effect that the ghost of Tucker nightly emerges from the lonely woods near Mr. Parker's home and roams about the place.

This apparition is so terribly real to the Parker servants that they have passed many sleepless nights, and the former State prosecutor, who fought

Good Place for a Ghost.

The house of former Attorney General Parker is a beautiful place. The house is on the road leading from South Lancaster village to Four Ponds. At the rear is a dense growth of chestnut and oak trees, and a row of poplars.

According to the tales of the girls [illegible] employed on the Parker place, the shade of Tucker each night looms mysteriously out of the gloomy shadows of these trees and skulks in and about the shrubbery.

MAYOR MAY LET CAULEY BE SACRIFICED.

The prospect of a horde of independent Democratic candidates for the Board of Aldermen making Republican control of the board next year a possibility is causing Mayor Fitzgerald considerable anxiety and both he and President McLellan of the Democratic City Committee are straining every effort to keep all independents out of the field.

Even Chairman Edward L. Cauley of the board, who, although backed by the mayor, was defeated by Charles S. Sullivan in the Charlestown district, will be sacrificed to carry out the plan.

Eight Independents in Field.

Aldermen Fred J. Kneeland and Edward L. Cauley, Thomas J. Collins, Eugene T. Brazzell, J. Frank O'Hare, James H. Baldwin and Dennis [illegible], all defeated in the primaries, and Colonel Roger F. Scannell are among those who have already announced their intention of seeking election [illegible] independent nomination papers. During the next few days the efforts of the Mayor will be towards pulling [illegible] out of the fight.

While if the vote in the primaries, 42,116 Democratic, 41,119 Republican, was followed out in the proportion at the election [illegible] the fear of getting a good working majority in the Board the experience of last year has put them on their guard.

A year ago [illegible] and the fact that many of the Republicans were [illegible] gave that party six members of the Board and put them in a position to cause the Mayor a good deal of trouble. [illegible] for this reason the Good Government Association has put the ban on [illegible]

DR. MUCK TAKES BIG LEAP TO THE NORTH.

MME. SZUMOWSKA IN A CHOPIN CONCERTO

By Kent Perkins.

Dr. Muck, bringing [illegible] of praise won in New York and other cities on his first tour with the Symphony Orchestra, took his fifth concert in Symphony Hall last night a further step and a wider one than any of his previous little excursions away from the severely classic [illegible] with which he began his career in Boston.

His programme of three numbers skipped lightly from the tuneful [illegible] of Weber's "Oberon" overture to the glitter, brilliance and deep sentiment of Chopin's Concerto in E minor for piano and orchestra, with Mme. Antoinette Szumowska as the soloist, and then it leaped across the Baltic, the Kattegat and the North Sea to the [illegible] of Scandinavia that blared and [illegible] and struggled and sang in Sinding's symphony in D minor, No. 1, op. 21.

People Liked First Two Pieces.

The [illegible] was pleased with the euphonious swing and the delicate tracery with which the [illegible] was [illegible] forth. It thoroughly enjoyed the playing of Mme. Szumowska, who lacked [illegible] and force in the first movement of the concerto, but entered with more [illegible] into the spring moonlight [illegible] of the romantic [illegible] and it gave her copious rounds of applause.

But the mighty jump to the Northland was apparently too great. It seemed to daze the assemblage, and Sinding's symphony was received with a coolness that was marked in contrast to the warmth showed even the [illegible] and [illegible] of the programme.

This was not the fault of Dr. Muck or the orchestra. The [illegible] entered with splendid vigor upon the work of the symphony. He [illegible] the orchestra and it played with a freedom and dash so reckless at times that it threatened to tear holes in the precision and exactitude of rhythm and time for which the Symphony players are justly famous.

Symphony Splendidly Played.

The storms of [illegible], the conquering sweep of the Vikings, the raging blasts of winter under the midnight sun, which never [illegible] to bear in the first part of the work, were delivered with magnificent gusto.

The sombre sections that follow, which you may call the gloom of the ice [illegible] and frozen forests or the despair of a conquered nation, as you will, [illegible] have been [illegible] borne in upon the ear.

The triumph that blazed and danced and sang in characteristic Scandinavian fashion at the close was complete and satisfying.

Yet the people were little moved. Perhaps the [illegible] speech of the North did not appeal to them. Perhaps this year something more [illegible] and pleasant than the Vikings and their stern and half savage characters is wanted. Perhaps, as at first suggested, the leap to Scandinavia was too sudden and wide.

At any rate it was not the fault of Dr. Muck, or the Symphony artists that the excursion was not taken with enthusiasm.

Next week a programme of Russian music with a brand new symphony by Glazounoff will be tried. It will be interesting to watch its reception.

H. Butler, proprietor of the Buffalo Evening News, the organ of the party in the Western end of the State. In his telegram, which was printed in the News, Senator Platt said:

"Question of resignation I will discuss hereafter. Am not considering it seriously now."

One of the first official papers that will come into the hands of Governor Hughes after he is sworn in will be the resignation of the senior Senator from the State of New York.

Following is the story, in brief, of the career of Mrs. Platt, whose quarrel with and separation from her aged husband has precipitated the scandal which is to drive him from public life a broken, decrepit man, mentally and physically.

MRS. THOMAS C. PLATT.

CHAPTER I.

The prettiest girl in the little settlement of Portage Lake, Me., more than a score of years ago, was Carry Thompson. Her family lived in a small house on the road leading from Portage to Fort Kent. There were several boys in the family. Carrie was the only girl.

The boys went to work in the logging camps. Carrie was sent to school. She was the belle of the school. She was tall and lithe. Her eyes were big, black and [illegible]. There was a roguish dimple in her chin. They speak of her yet in that section of Maine as "Pretty Carrie."

A traveling salesman who had heard of the girl's beauty dropped into town one day, and it was not long until he had met the village beauty. His name was Snow. He wore very fine looking clothes. Within three months Carrie and Snow were married. For two years Carrie was lost to Portage. Then she returned with a baby daughter and a divorce. But she was even prettier than when she went away.

CHAPTER II.

The [illegible] widow Snow and her baby a few years later went to New York. The Maine girl was [illegible] of her fortune and her face was [illegible]. The first thing that was heard of her in New York City was when she was taken seriously ill in a lodging house. She was removed to a hospital on the West Side.

There the [illegible] woman met Dr. Theodore Janeway. It was a case of love at first sight. [illegible] physician could [illegible] Dr. Janeway, who was the house physician.

Watching over her [illegible] with loving care, [illegible] back to health and strength. [illegible] they were married. They lived happily together until 1897, when Dr. Janeway died.

CHAPTER III.

It was shortly after the death of her husband that the still young and beautiful widow of Dr. Janeway met Senator Thomas Collier Platt of New York. The wife of the aged Senator was then living.

Mrs. Janeway and her daughter were next seen in Washington, [illegible] at $[illegible] and $[illegible] [illegible]. By this time the [illegible] Carrie had been replaced by [illegible].

In their rooms at the Arlington, Mrs. Platt lay ill. The widow called upon her and [illegible] into the [illegible] to the comfort of the dying woman. The assiduous attention of the pretty woman to the wife of the Senator called for much favorable comment.

But when the widow sallied [illegible] in costly gowns, with her hands and throat ablaze with flashing gems, the [illegible] began to stare and wonder.

CHAPTER IV.

The wife of the Senator died December 13, 1901. Then Widow Janeway turned her attention openly to the gray bearded Senator. She drove daily in the Senator's carriage and lived in sumptuous apartments opposite his hotel.

A [illegible] about this time [illegible] street, Washington, [illegible]. When it was [illegible] the mansion had been built for Mrs. Janeway, Senator Platt and the [illegible].

The dashing widow took possession of the house and soon was entertaining there lavishly. Prominent politicians always frequented the house. It was reported that the widow and the Senator were engaged. The Senator denied it.

Then came the Mae Wood episode. She published love letters alleged to have been written to her by the Senator. She threatened to sue him. He compromised, and his marriage with Mrs. Janeway followed quickly.

CHAPTER V.

The wedding of the Senator took place three years ago last month. The first reception of the new Mrs. Platt at the Arlington hotel in Washington was a fiasco. Even the Senator's political power could not compel people to come to their home of [illegible].

Later Mrs. Platt went to the Senator's home at Highland Mills, N. Y. It was there that she met Hedges, the young expressman, who was afterward taken into the employ of the family at the special request of Mrs. Platt.

The apparent friendliness of the young man and Mrs. Platt on a trip across the continent right before the eyes of the old and infirm husband caused much comment. The story was recently made public in New York and created a sensation. It was the beginning of the end of the married life of this couple.

He has cured permanently every case of appendicitis that has been brought to him for treatment at his home, Twelfth and Washington streets, Kansas City, Mo. He publishes a magazine which gives full details of this method of treatment and will send it to all who write him.

Both Suffered From Catarrh of the Head and Throat. Their Recovery Was Prompt and Lasting.

Peruna is probably kept as a family medicine in more homes than any other medicine invented.

It is safe to say that no medicine ever devised has found such wonderful popularity as a household remedy as Peruna.

It is estimated that in at least one or two million homes Peruna is a popular household remedy.

MRS. P. S. GEISSLER.

ETHEL GEISSLER.

Mrs. P. S. Geissler, 80 Milton street, Cleveland, Ohio, writes:

"I wrote to you for advice in regard to the health of my daughter. I have been giving her the Peruna regularly, as stated, and she is entirely cured of her catarrh of the throat and head. I thank you very much for your advice.

"Peruna has done me wonderful good, also, for the same ailment. I am entirely cured. I would not be without it. I will certainly praise your medicine wherever I see it is needed."

Catarrh of the head and throat abound with all their disagreeable symptoms of hacking and coughing, sneezing and snuffing.

Such a remedy is Peruna.

Many a mother has discovered its merits, not only when she herself is attacked by some phase of catarrh, but for the children also.

No sooner has one member of the family been relieved—no sooner has its efficacy been discovered in one case, than it is tried in another case.

Soon the discovery is made that Peruna is a reliable family remedy, good for mother and daughter, father and son.

No wonder so many mothers praise it. No wonder so many fathers insist on keeping it at hand.

Pe-ru-na Protects the Entire Household.

We have in our files many testimonials similar to that of Mrs. Geissler. However, we do not hear from the large majority of mothers who have been benefited by Peruna.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Costs Nothing To Try.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

The Peary expedition has revived interest in Polar exploration throughout the world. The next man who will try to reach the North Pole will be Walter Wellman, an American. He will make his attempt next Summer and go in an airship. This was attempted by Herr Andree and two companions several years ago. They never returned. Mr. Wellman has a superior equipment to the Andree party. When he arrived in New York from Europe yesterday he said:

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and, mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin diseases as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

MAYORAL FIGHT WAXES HOT IN CAMBRIDGE.

MAYOR THURSTON FACES OPPOSITION OF LABOR

Cambridge's candidates for the Democratic mayoralty nomination sat up until long after midnight this morning saying things about themselves and their opponents and making charges and countercharges.

All over the University City posters went up during the evening in the interests of James H. Aylward. "Aylward. What?" they said.

Labor Opposes Thurston.

Mayor Charles T. Thurston's renomination is now opposed by the Central Labor Union of Cambridge (40 locals), which as long ago as last July declared Mayor Thurston "unfair to organized labor"; by the Cambridge Independence League, which [illegible] 1,100 votes in the city at the State election, and by the Cambridge Municipal Ownership League, which indignantly declares that Thurston has used and is using a false profession of interest in Municipal Ownership as a subterfuge to obtain votes.

The Mayor is also opposed by former Mayor John H. H. McNamee, who said in a signed statement at midnight:

"I don't want any man to vote for Mr. Aylward or against Mayor Thurston on religious grounds. It was [illegible] for me in a recent speech to refer to a condition which had existed in Cambridge up to five or six years ago when everyone agrees a man's religion was a factor in his political career.

Condition Passed Away.

"That condition has now happily passed away. I hope it will never return. And the hope that it will never return is what makes me fight against the happening of anything that will make the return possible.

"One of the things which will make its return possible is the election of Charles H. Thurston."

Among the developments of the eleventh hour was a statement from Secretary James H. Donnelly of the Aylward Campaign Committee declaring that Thurston's statement of yesterday was an attempt to justify his betrayal of the Park Department to the tender mercies of George Howland Cox, a most virulent Republican partisan.

Explains How Money Went.

Thurston pleads the Donnelly statement said that he found that money appropriated for a specific purpose, namely the East Cambridge embankment, had not always been spent for the purpose for which it was specifically appropriated.

In answer Donnelly offers to the public a sworn statement from Andrew J. Conlin, who was chairman of the Park Commission in 1903, 1904 and 1905, in which Conlin declares under oath that "not one cent of the East Cambridge embankment appropriation was diverted from the purpose for which it was appropriated."

MIDNIGHT LIQUOR PLUMS MAY GO TO 30 HOTELS.

Upon Result of Referendum Depends Scramble for Extension of One Hour for Traffic; $500 Extra Fee

Upon the result of the referendum on the 12 o'clock hotel law for Boston depends a big scramble among the hotel men for that special privilege.

Seventy hotels in Boston that have first-class licenses are now kept open until 11 o'clock for the sale of liquors, and if this new law is accepted thirty of that number will continue selling until 12 o'clock, or an hour later.

The extra privilege costs $500 more, but it is not the price but who shall get the special license. The hotel men, who are all on one basis now, claim that all should be treated alike, and it is this argument which may decide the question.

At all events, the new law creates a special class, and a special pull will be necessary to get one of the licenses, for they are limited to one for every 20,000 of Boston's population. There are over 597,000 people in Boston, which means thirty licenses of the midnight kind, and as there are seventy hotels, big and little, good or bad, the excise board will be kept busy settling the question "Who is who?"

The excise board, comprising Baker, [illegible] and Hudson, which is a Republican institution created by a Republican Legislature and appointed by a Republican Governor [illegible] in this game, [illegible] will be a large factor.

[illegible] Republican state committee, from which one of the commissioners graduated, will have much to say about these [illegible] political favors, and the hotel men who want to get one of these licenses may find it feasible to become acquainted with some of the members of the committee and then to Pemberton square and the excise board.

FAT TURKEYS ARE EASY FOR RICH PURSES.

ALSO BEEF, SPINACH AND OTHER FIXINGS

Boston market is ready to supply either the old-fashioned Thanksgiving dinner or the latest devices of a real French chef. Substantials and dainties of every description are in the market, and whatever one wants, provided his purse is long enough, is to be found.

Prices are at present rather high, and what they will be the day before Thanksgiving depends entirely upon the weather. The market is unusually well supplied.

Turkeys, game, chicken, fowl, veal, lamb and vegetables of all sorts are to be offered in tempting display.

Turkeys are selling from 25 to 30 cents a pound. This is the price for birds which have just been killed and which are strangers to the cold storage of previous seasons. But Rhode Island turkeys are for the few. One Faneuil market dealer says that Rhode Island does not supply enough turkeys in a season to stock Boston market for a single week.

Beef at Two Prices.

Good corn fed beef is selling at 25 cents the pound, and grass fed beef can be bought for from 10 to 12 cents a pound.

If the purse can keep up the appetite, black ducks can be got for $2.25 a pair; red heads at $2.50 a pair; [illegible] going at 25 cents a pound; snipe at $1.50 a dozen, and quail at $6. [illegible] is on the Boston market and is selling up to 60 cents a pound.

The fish market is wonderfully well stocked with the very best. Mackerel range anywhere from twenty cents to thirty-five or forty each; smelts bring from fifteen to forty cents per pound; shrimp cost forty cents a quart, and the live ones cost $1.50 a quart. Lobsters [illegible] thirty-two cents the pound, while frog legs are jumping around forty cents.

The vegetable market is all that could be desired and the prices are reasonable. House tomatoes cost twenty-five to thirty cents a pound; oyster plant brings fifteen cents a piece; okra is going at $1.50 per basket and Summer squash at fifteen cents each. A good [illegible] brings fifty cents easily. Cauliflower costs from twenty to twenty-five cents.

Apples Cost More Than Eggs.

Luscious apples from far-away Washington State coast all the way to seventy-five cents per dozen, but they are beauties. Idaho apples are vended at fifty cents a dozen.

Those who have acquired foreign tastes and appetites will not have to go hungry, for Boston market is [illegible] stocked with all sorts of foreign dainties.

For instance, there are French partridges at $1.75 a pair, Scotch grouse at the same rate, Egyptian quail at $4.50 per dozen, Russian hares at $2.50 per pair and so on.

One can get just anything for his Thanksgiving dinner here in Boston that he desires or could desire, provided his purse can keep up with his appetite and taste.

SAY LAW IGNORED BIG EMPLOYMENT BUREAU HEAD.

Civil Service Commission Declares Walter L. Sears, Manager of New State Department, Must Pass Examination

Walter Lincoln Sears, a Ward 7 Republican, has been appointed superintendent of the Free Employment Bureau instituted by an act of the last Legislature. [illegible] Chief Pidgin of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor appointed Sears, who is classed as a friend of Governor Guild. Politicians assume that the Governor suggested Sears for the place.

The Civil Service Commission has made no protest. It was said by Secretary Dudley that the appointment of Sears is "provisional." As the bureau is a new institution the civil service board has no list [illegible] from which an appointee could be named.

The committee said that Kneeland street was not [illegible] enough and if the bureau was located there it would become a political asset of a ward faction. The committee is opposed to Sears.

LEADERS OF BOSTON THOUGHT CONDEMN THE TRIAL MARRIAGE PROPOSAL

I DO not agree with Mrs. Parsons and the ideas of "trial marriages" as suggested in her book on "The Family." I have no doubt that many persons will come forward now and speak against the book. I have not read the book. Until I do, I can say nothing further in detail in the way of commenting on the author's views. —JULIA WARD HOWE.

TRIAL marriages would be used by men and women for purposes of licentiousness. There is only one way of maintaining the sanctity of the American home, the foundation of our government, and that is to preserve the Christian idea of marriage and make it steadfast and strong. People married become one flesh and should never part, save for one cause.—REV. HERBERT S. JOHNSON.

I think that the suggestion of trial marriages is disgusting in the extreme. When you bring marriage down to a commercial transaction and propose State regulation and instruction, you have destroyed its real sanctity and power to uplift the community and fortify the State by building up the sacredness and holiness of home life.—ATTORNEY SAMUEL J. ELDER.

IMAGINE the complications if we were to tolerate trial marriages! The degradation of the people would be deplorable. It would unloosen every bond of society and it would lower us to the quality of brutes. Of course, every man should be held to as strict a moral accountability as women. As for allowing women the same latitude as men I should not consider that question at all. —REV. P. S. HENSON.

THE suggestion is foolish. It is not worth even discussion. Far from taking any stock in it, I should very much like to see a uniform divorce law for all the States. That's what we Americans ought to be talking about. Divorces should be allowed for very few reasons, and everybody, rich and poor, high and low, should be compelled to adhere to the law. [illegible] F. W. DALLINGER.

FROM a social standpoint I would like to ask the question, "What would become of the woman who was tried and found wanting?" And, again, if the children are not to form any part in that trial marriage then the very foundation upon which family life is based would not exist. All government and all religion has its basis in the family, by the hearthside.—MRS. JULIA E. DUFF.

THERE is only one kind of marriage, and that is the marriage provided for in the Bible. No other kind of marriage should be tolerated. The home training of every child should be in the hands of the parents. Teachers should not attempt to supervise this home training. Not only should divorces be harder for parents with children, but all divorces should be made harder. —REV. CHARLES A. CRANE.

WOMANKIND CRIES "SHAME" AT MRS. PARSONS' PROPOSAL

DECRY TRIAL MARRIAGE

Ideas Advanced by Daughter of Henry Clews Regarded as a Blow at the Home and the Fireside by Most People

By Eleanor Ames.

When Mrs. Elsie Clews Parsons advocated trial marriages and other radical things in her remarkable new book she threw a bombshell into the lap of the family and sprinkled dynamite on the hearthstone.

By such words and more do men and women alike disapprove her ideas. All of which proves one of two things, and which depends largely on the [illegible] either the world [illegible] sound and sane at care, or else it has not yet advanced to the point where Mrs. Parsons's ideas would be [illegible].

The two most startling utterances by Mrs. Parsons are that trial marriage would tend to solve the problem of matrimonial failure and the denial that marriage is a [illegible]

She suggests a probation [illegible] of marriage [illegible]

[illegible] Mrs. Parsons [illegible] end [illegible]

in the absence of offspring, should suffer public condemnation, but should be free to marry again.

The general reason for this broad and free matrimonial arrangement would seem to be that no two people really know each other's character and disposition until they have "summered and wintered" together.

Requires Plane of Equality.

Neither do they, but if the whole world were allowed to break the marital vows as it pleased, the great sociological problem would achieve such proportions as to dwarf nearly every other great question.

There are individual cases where the trial marriage might work to perfection, but they are rare and when they exist the people are usually big enough and brave enough to defy criticism and work out their own salvation in oblivion to the opinions of the world at large.

The majority of people cling to marriage as an ideal. Anything which tends to lower it, arouses a primitive fighting instinct.

But omitting all reverent sentiment, there are enough other reasons for rejecting the trial marriage.

Before any such plan can be considered at all, the world will have to be largely made over. Labor conditions will have to be changed.

The man and the woman will have to stand on a plane of independent equality and equal independence. Each must be equally strong, equally able to meet and face great crises, equally considered in [illegible]

This would demand an entire reconstruction of human nature.

The nature of man is not the nature of woman. It never has been; it never will be.

The Woman Would Suffer.

In the unhappy ending of a trial marriage in ninety per cent of cases who would suffer?

The woman.

When a woman marries unconsciously she capitulates. She leans, she looks for protection. She has a subconscious feeling of dependence.

Cut her adrift at the end of one, two, five years and her plight is pitiable. The rudderless ship drifting in mid ocean is a happy craft compared to the average woman who, after years of a husband's protection, is thrust forth to shift for herself.

Some of Mrs. Parsons's ideas are excellent. The one regarding the health certificate being attached to the marriage license is most commendable. Could that be put into effect [illegible] ter, and Mrs. Parsons [illegible] marriage is intended to insure the best possible posterity.

Her belief that divorced people should be allowed to remarry and that divorce should be more difficult to obtain where children are to be considered, will meet with a degree of favor.

The making of a false matrimonial step should not ruin an individual's chances for happiness.

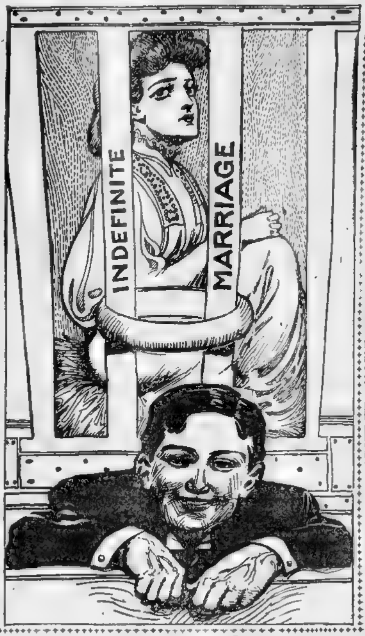
Her Ideas Dangerous.

The brilliant [illegible] which Mrs. Parsons holds in intellectual and social circles makes her ideas all the more dangerous.

But those who are inclined to accept her views on trial marriage seriously would do well to remember that she herself is happily married, and that she probably regards her own marriage as most sacred and enduring.

Few radical reformers take their own medicine.

WAITING—FOR WHAT?



FAMOUS MEN AND WOMEN ATTACK IDEA AS SHOCKING

[illegible] Mrs. Parsons's book, The Family, has aroused a storm of protest all over America. Many noted persons in Boston and other cities, both in the clergy and the laity, have voiced their opinions to the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN, their views being printed herewith.

REV. ALBERT E. GEORGE:

The suggestion of trial marriages by Mrs. Parsons is not any improvement over the ideas advanced by Grant Allen and George Meredith [illegible] proposal upon its very face value allows marriage to be trifled with. It would tend to make the marriage relation a mere experiment.

Her point could be gained when the young people become engaged.

The best thing is to keep your eyes wide open before marriage and half shut afterwards.

AMY F. ACTON:

[illegible] marriage contract. It would mean degradation.

Blighted lives and unhappy, miserable existence would be the logical aftermath of a marriage contract of weeks or months. There would be [illegible] should be [illegible]

The REV. J. E. GILBERT, D. D., of Washington.

The suggestion of marriage on probation made by Mrs. Parsons is shocking, heathenish, disgusting, and coming from a woman it is disgraceful. If practised in this country it would prove subversive to our civilization, bringing evil results such as appear in certain half civilized countries where it has been tried.

MRS. WILLIAM TOD HELMUTH, SR., Prominent New York Society Woman:

I believe we wed for better or worse. Of course none of us expect to marry for [illegible]

MRS. J. G. PHELPS STOKES.

Please say that I do not believe in trial marriages.

REV. MADISON C. PETERS:

I quite agree with Mrs. Parsons that divorced people should be allowed to remarry without criticism. I have two daughters growing up. I would urge them to be in no haste, but to deliberately choose their life partner. But I would not ask them to live with a man who proved unworthy.

DR. ELIZA TAYLOR RANSOM, No. 373 Commonwealth avenue:

[illegible] in trying to lessen the divorce evil, but has not struck the proper remedy.

"In this age of civilization trial marriages, instead of uplifting and bettering humanity, would be disastrous and a detriment to humanity. [illegible] along that line do not fit under the present status of affairs.

Regarding the moral accountability to which men should be held I think they should not be allowed any more freedom than women, either morally or [illegible]

DR. ADA A. ACHORN, No. 178 Huntington avenue:

Entirely out of reason is the proposal [illegible] terminated [illegible] It is not [illegible] woman [illegible]

"It would certainly [illegible] conditions worse, and I cannot reason out why such a prominent [illegible] woman should advocate such an [illegible]

"Every progressive woman [illegible] that man should be held to as [illegible] moral [illegible] as woman [illegible]

[illegible] that the teacher or nurse would have sufficient experience to direct the home handling of children. I have always maintained that every child is a problem in himself or herself.

SAMUEL ELDER, Eminent Lawyer.

"I think that the suggestion of trial marriages is disgusting in the extreme. [illegible] propose State regulation [illegible] community and [illegible] holiness of home [illegible]

Nature and common [illegible] for centuries [illegible] To bring marriage down to [illegible] regulating it by law, is utterly degrading.

REV. HERBERT S. JOHNSON, pastor Warren Avenue Baptist Church:

"Trial marriages would be used by men and women for purposes of licentiousness. There is only one way of maintaining the sanctity of the American home, the foundation of our government, and that is to preserve the Christian idea of marriage and make it steadfast and strong. People married become one flesh and should never part, save for one cause. A standard less high tends to the disruption of the home, being simply this, that children will become boarders in hotels instead of olive branches of the old-time home.

"With the American ideas of to-day, the fickleness of the American people, the constant desire for a change, the feeling of [illegible] getting 'tired' of something, this idea will be a most dangerous thing."

Quotations From Mrs. Parsons' Book, on Marriage and Divorce

"IT would therefore seem well, from this point of view, to encourage trial marriage, the relation to be entered into with a view to permanency, but with the privilege of breaking it if proved unsuccessful, and in the absence of offspring, without suffering any great degree of public condemnation."

"The dogma that marriage is an unquestionable sacrament and the dictum that it is merely a survival of one of the past forms of property holding, are both 'dams' to a proper solution of the social question."

CROKER VILLIFIES HEARST; HEARST HAS SHARP REPLY

Emphatic Answer to Statement Published by the Ex-Boss of Tammany in Ireland.

Dublin, Ireland, Nov. 17.—In a copyrighted interview by the Publishers' Press [illegible] and would not attempt to again be the Tammany leader, Richard Croker [illegible] William Randolph Hearst, Croker said:

[illegible] visit me in 1903 at Wantage and beg me to resume the leadership of Tammany Hall."

Hearst is now apparently controlled by the idea that he is greater than the Democratic party. He is ambitious to make the party his servant. He is a slave to passion and egotism. His creed is that everybody who is for him is an angel, while everybody who is against him is a demon. Because I think he is still a danger to Democracy I consider it my duty to speak.

"I want to tell Bourke Cockran that I believe him to be the biggest blackguard of modern times. In all my experience I have never found an honest streak in him.

A Good Word for Murphy.

"I consider Cockran one of the most dangerous and most treacherous men in American politics. All that is necessary to learn his character is to look him straight in the face and watch the little, close set, beady eyes roll in his head as he attempts to deceive. Cockran is one of the best speakers in America, but he never believes a word he says. This is the man who got into the 4th and is now preaching clean politics.

"I always found Charles F. Murphy upright, honest and well meaning. I am still unable to account for his support of Hearst in the nominating convention. It was the first occasion in my recollection when Tammany was able to nominate its own man (Sulzer) for Governor. Murphy allowed the opportunity to pass.

"It seems to me Hearst held his Independence League club over Tammany. I am glad the rest of the ticket was elected. I am especially pleased with the election of the judiciary nominees. I have nothing to regard with shame in my political career except my friendship for Bourke Cockran. I never did anything corrupt nor betrayed anybody.

"Alive to Dangers of Trusts."

"The real lesson of the election was that the people are alive to the dangers of trusts. If Democrats fail to realize that [illegible] will surely suffer. Democrats should seize [illegible]

Nothing could induce me to trust myself in Tammany and play another part in politics. I am out for good and all. I would not live five years if I returned to the political arena. Here in Ireland, with my horses, I am looking forward to the fifteen best years of my life.

Austin, Texas, Nov. 17.—When William Randolph Hearst's attention was called to Croker's attack upon him, he said:

Mr. Croker's statement that I asked him to come home and be the leader of Tammany is ridiculous. I drove him off Tammany and drove his ice trust mayor out of office. I have no objection to Croker as a private citizen or as an exile, and I have no interest in the international management of Tammany, but as a citizen I would object to Croker as leader of Tammany. He is absolutely the worst leader Tammany has had and his influence has always been exerted in behalf of corporation-ridden candidates. As a Democrat, I would also object to him, as his local leadership has always been disastrous to the party [illegible] as discreditable. I should think the best thing for Croker to do would be to stay abroad. That would also be the safest thing in these days of investigation and prison penalties."

ARREST TREASURER WELLS FOR SHORTAGE

James S. Wells, treasurer of the James S. Wells Company, fish dealers, of No. 334 Atlantic avenue, was arrested yesterday charged with being responsible for a shortage of $1,200 in the company's funds.

The alleged discrepancy was discovered by auditors who were put on the books a week ago. Wells has been treasurer of the company for more than a year.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP IS URGED BY FEDERATION

By Frank K. Foster.

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 17.—The convention of the A. F. of L. was enlivened with another preliminary skirmish on the political issue at the opening of its session to-day, when E. Gerry Brown of the Brockton Central Labor Union dissented from the report of the Committee on Resolutions, which referred his proposition, for the outlining of a plan for political organization, to the committee which has the general subject under consideration. Delegate Brown thought that a special committee should be appointed for the purpose, but the convention decided otherwise.

The convention went on record unanimously in favor of the establishment of a system of parcels post as a check upon the existing express and transportation monopolies.

Declaration of Principles.

The question as to just what constitutes the declaration of principles of the A. F. of L. was referred to the committee on resolutions, which is instructed to take the matter up, investigate the records of past conventions and formulate a platform.

Miss Mary E. McDowell [illegible] addressed the convention in the [illegible] universal peace, and incidentally [illegible] investigation of women in industry.

By a narrow margin the request of the Bookbinders' Union for an increased duty on books was approved.

The printers' demand for government ownership and control of telegraph lines was unanimously indorsed.

Radical-Conservative Clash.

A clash between the radical and conservative wings of the convention arose over the adverse report of the committee on resolutions upon a proposition to ask the government to regulate the hours of adult labor.

The resolution was [illegible] phraseology [illegible] referred [illegible] Delegate Bainer of Philadelphia [illegible] that the word was appropriate [illegible] socialistic delegates supported him.

Congressman Wilson declined to vest government with power to regulate adult labor. The committee was sustained.

The principle of popular election of judges was indorsed and also that of an income and inheritance tax.

E. Gerry Brown made a strong address for the adoption of his resolution advising [illegible] protest before Congress against the further extension of special privilege to the national banks and secure a recommittal.

Delegate Tony Etenza of the Florida Federation wanted to supplement President Roosevelt's Panama investigation by sending a committee of two to travel over the canal zone for the purpose of getting at the real conditions of labor there.

Church Sends Greeting.

Rev. Charles Stelze presented to the convention the cordial fraternal greetings of the general conference of the Presbyterian church last held in Indianapolis.

The Presbyterian Church, according to Mr. Stelze is the only denomination taking official cognizance of the trade union movement by its appointing a standing committee for co-operation with it. At a mass meeting in St. Paul last evening [illegible] New England delegates fear they may not get home in time for their Thanksgiving turkey.

To Aid Colonial Policy.

The federation has been asked to take a hand in shaping the colonial policy of the government. Santiago Iglesias [illegible] the Free Federation of Labor of Porto Rico has presented a [illegible] administration the [illegible] seriously [illegible] as an organizer [illegible] his activity on trade union lines.

There is a strong sentiment apparent in favor of international peace and arbitration. Every reference to the folly of war and the idiocy of workingmen killing each other to carry out the political ambition of rulers has been enthusiastically cheered, and a determined opposition has been shown to the idea of the military training of school children. A series of resolutions dealing with the broad question of international peace, introduced by Vice President Duncan of Quincy, calls for the specific indorsement of the program of,

1. Immunity of private property at sea in time of war.
2. A general arbitration treaty.

[illegible] investigation of all difficulties [illegible] hostilities are commenced [illegible] the Federation [illegible] State [illegible] and local organizations [illegible] to bear upon national legislation for the furtherance of government initiative towards this end.

EVEN John Philip Sousa, who has no use for phonographs, has been forced to recognize the Edison Phonograph as a formidable competitor. The two-step king says that people will no longer go to concerts if they can have music in their own homes so easily and so cheaply as they can with the Edison Phonograph.

This is an unwilling tribute, but it nevertheless is a tribute. The man who has an Edison Phonograph has a concert in his own home. Even a king could not have more. At a store in your town you can hear the Edison Phonograph right away.

Fortunes are Made In Goldfield Mines

There are about 70 producing properties in Goldfield, employing over 1400 men. In one week the Mining Stock Exchange showed sales of 1,840,000 shares of Goldfield stocks, for which $826,324 was paid—to say nothing of private transactions, amounting to over two million dollars!

AN OFFICE BOY CLEARS $29,800

[illegible]

To the eastward of the famous Mohawk group of mines and in the same rich mineral belt, is the property of the Goldfield Ledge Mining Co., consisting of about 200 acres of mineralized ground. Some of the richest gold float, and some of the finest outcroppings of gold ore in the whole camp are found on these properties. These are the same formation as the fabulously rich ore of the Mohawk Jumbo, Red Top and Florence Mines, which have now been consolidated into one company, with a capital of fifty million dollars.

Goldfield Ledge Mining Company

is the best and most profitable proposition offered in the Goldfield district today, and it has one of the largest acreages of any company in Goldfield. The capitalization of this company is small, being only $1,250,000. The rapid rise of this stock has attracted attention. Buy it now, this week, while you can get it at 10 cents a share. Then watch what it will sell for in a month or six weeks. How long do you suppose it will remain at 10 cents a share? We predict that it is liable to jump to $1 a share within a short time.

Sixteen-year-old Mary R[illegible]

We predict that Goldfield Ledge will soon take its place among the great mines of Goldfield. The development work shows an immense ledge of ore 30 feet wide. Is it any wonder that we are enthusiastic and believe we have a second Mohawk?

I believe in being perfectly frank with our customers. In the first place I claim that all stocks are more or less speculative, but the way fortunes are being made in Goldfield now gives you just as good an opportunity as scores of others who have made fortunes in a short time.

MRS. GRANT MAKES $44,700

I believe that you, as an investor, will find it much more satisfactory to do business with an established and responsible eastern brokerage firm here in the east. I shall certainly do all in my power to safeguard my clients' interests in every way.

COPPER LEADS MINING MARKET

RAILROAD MOVE MEANS GREAT BOOM

Heinzes to Become Competitors of American Smelting and Refining.

CAPITAL WITHOUT LIMIT

By Thomas C. Shotwell.

New York, Nov. 17.—Copper stocks are once more leaders in the New York mining market. The Cobalt discovery is not ended by any means. While the copper stocks are active very few persons realize the true reason for their sudden revival.

One of the greatest railroad companies operating through the Alleghany Mountains has formally decided to operate all trains through the mountains, both passenger and freight, by electric locomotives.

Although directors voted on this some weeks ago the announcement is here published for the first time. It is not a mere theoretical movement, but the engineering department has been instructed to prepare plans for the new motive power and active work has already been begun.

It will take several years to get the electric trains in operation, but the company has an abundance of money on hand and its [illegible] the dividends [illegible] will be no [illegible] raising [illegible] to [illegible]. Necessity of [illegible] failure to [illegible] more [illegible] the stockholders feel that more should be paid.

Other Railroads Must Follow.

This movement by this one railroad is of sensational importance both to the railroad world and to the copper mining industry. Millions of pounds of copper will be needed for new electric locomotives, for track connections, feed wires and power houses. [illegible] as for the [illegible] very [illegible] operating expenses on the railroad. It means [illegible] rates. [illegible] low. There are thousands of miles of railroads in [illegible] regions where millions of horse power [illegible] of cataracts [illegible] Steam [illegible] on roads [illegible] where the grades [illegible] wasted [illegible] there is no storage battery reserve for the sharp places. With electric locomotives power is consumed only as needed. The electric locomotive on an east grade or on a down grade draws but lightly on the general supply of current.

Means Boom in Copper Metal.

Sources of electrical power become important things to the producers of copper who will sell the metal in proportion to the cheapness with which electricity can be produced. In [illegible] East there are millions upon millions of tons of [illegible] to such an extent that it will not pay to ship. Many of these mines lay immediately at the railroad tracks. In many mines where high grade coal predominates great masses of the low grade product must be mined to release the high grade. Small [illegible] about the [illegible] in the Alleghany Mountains. [illegible] for [illegible] is that the [illegible] located [illegible] water. Power houses [illegible] and on [illegible] the coal is to be [illegible] of the mine, and the [illegible] over territory where [illegible] would be too expensive.

To the New York [illegible] credit is due [illegible] first to adopt [illegible] the [illegible] An era of copper [illegible] will startle the world must [illegible] this electrification of the railroad systems.

Heinze in a New Field.

Another new fact of importance which is [illegible] the first time is that the Heinzes [illegible] to become competitors of the American Smelting & Refining Company in the West. At present the Guggenheims [illegible] monopoly of smelting [illegible] fatal mistake [illegible] M. Schwab in having [illegible] the price charged [illegible] This set mine owners to [illegible] F. Augustus Heinze [illegible] He has [illegible] a ton to [illegible] Mine and [illegible] custom smelters [illegible] He figures [illegible] to himself [illegible] to own a great [illegible] the [illegible] plants in the West that is already [illegible] and should the deal go through [illegible] will enter the refining field almost immediately. Should he not get the [illegible] for which he is bidding he will build one.

Rich Strikes Are Made.

Even rich ores do not make a mining stock, as is proved by the Giroux in the same [illegible] This company has exceedingly [illegible] has been [illegible] the last few months, [illegible] was introduced, has [illegible] a desirable investment [illegible] or even a safe speculation. A [illegible] combined with good management is illustrated in the Anaconda, which this year steps ahead of the Calumet & Hecla [illegible] greatest producing [illegible] in the world. It has for years been one of the greatest silver mines in the world [illegible] the second largest [illegible] in the world. Within [illegible] extremely rich [illegible] on the 2,400 foot level [illegible] long ago disclosed its presence, but the extent of which is only now made apparent by actual opening of a tunnel.

Wall street refuses to believe these stories of strikes in the Anaconda and for that reason the companies' stock is selling at a figure which the insiders claim is ridiculously low. Wall street prefers to believe stories of strikes in undeveloped mines. Strikes in the Alice Mine at Butte have sent the stock of that company to dizzy heights within a week. This is one of the abandoned properties belonging to the Butte Coalition Company and has only recently been unwatered. The Butte and New York Company also claim strikes in its mines, which lay twenty miles from the centre of the Butte mining camp.

But Goldfield, Bullfrog and Tonopah continue as usual to be leaders in rich strikes. Hardly a day has passed but some dazzling news has come regarding the Mohawk or some other of the established mines in Nevada. Even discounting these reports liberally, enough of fact remains to establish Nevada as a gold region perhaps even greater than the Rand.

Cobalt Shipments Grow.

Guggenheim interests are not dismayed at the threatened opposition of Heinze smelters and refineries. They have made such a rich connection in the Cobalt region that more refineries are really needed. J. [illegible] Hammond, their chief mining engineer, will become president of the Nip-

Capital Flowing In.

Capital without limit is flowing into the Cobalt district, and investigations are making at a distance from the centre of the camp, and with profit. Several new holding companies have been organized and several mines now shipping will change hands in the near future. Thomas F. Ryan and his friends have organized the United [illegible] Exploration Company, which is a holding company for silver mines. This is the company which reference was made to in this column a week ago. It owns options secured by Grant Hugh Brown. Descriptions of the man have been sent to all camps in the hope that some clue to the movements of the man after he left this city may be obtained.

AN ACTUAL MINE—NOT A PROSPECT

On this great property [illegible] two shafts have been sunk [illegible] depth of 85 feet and [illegible] of 125 feet. These shafts have been [illegible] by drifting or tunneling, and [illegible] show splendid ore faces and ore [illegible]

Official records show that in this district it costs less to mine the ore, returns are safer and surer than in any other mining district in the world.

There are millionaires in Joplin today who were working with a pick and shovel a few years ago. The Joplin district produces about 90 per cent of all zinc produced in the U. S. and about [illegible] per cent of the entire world's product. The total cash value of zinc and lead mined in this district in the year 190[illegible] was $13,532,125.

No Man Ever Got Rich Without Taking a Chance

The sure way to make money in mining stocks is to grasp your opportunity when stocks are low. Take advantage not only of the [illegible] but of the various jumps in the market price of your stocks as development work progresses. All the United Standard Lead & Zinc Company wants is money enough to put up mills to concentrate their ore. You must remember that the development work is practically completed and by the time the mill wheels begin to turn dividends will be declared. This means that stock you are buying today at 5 cents per share should jump to $1.00.

United Standard Lead & Zinc [illegible]
[illegible] I regard your fifty acre tract, two miles west of Joplin, as one of the best propositions I have seen anywhere and it can certainly be made a big winner. The [illegible] already opened up and in sight is very rich and there is plenty of [illegible] the drifts to run a two hundred ton mill. In addition to this the other ground has been prospected and shows splendid and continuous ore bodies all over the tract. There is plenty of room on this tract for [illegible] good mills which [illegible] give a weekly production of two hundred tons of zinc [illegible] which is also very rich in [illegible] would be [illegible] the [illegible] $4,000 to $10,000 worth of ore a week or $[illegible] a year.

I would not know where to go to find a better or more promising piece of property in the whole district.

I have known for years the men who are behind [illegible] business dealings with [illegible] They are [illegible] reliable business [illegible] stand high in this [illegible]

Yours truly,

"ONE OF THE RICHEST AND MOST PROMISING IN THE DISTRICT."

JOPLIN, MO., Sept. 8, 1906.
United Standard Lead & Zinc Co., City.

Gentlemen:—I am well acquainted with your fifty-acre tract two miles west of Joplin. For two years I was superintendent of a mine on an adjoining tract. I have been in your mine fifteen or [illegible] times. You have a [illegible] proposition. There is [illegible] of rich ore-bearing [illegible] Recommended a two [illegible] for the two [illegible] I am [illegible] a mill [illegible] I am also familiar with different drill [illegible] that have been sunk on different parts of the tract, [illegible] show good ore.

The tract is well surrounded with good paying mines. One about a week ago a hole was drilled [illegible] just west of yours and the drill run [illegible] feet of good ore. I consider your tract one of the richest and most promising in the district. I have been mining and managing mines in this district for 25 years. Yours very truly,
PETER JOHNSON.

"I WANT TO CARRY ALL THE STOCK I CAN."

JOPLIN, MO., Sept. 1, 1906.
United Standard Lead & Zinc Co., City.

Gentlemen:—I have been working in your mine on the 50-acre tract, two miles west of Joplin, and know all about the different ore faces in both [illegible] I think you have a fine proposition. There is plenty of rich ore-bearing dirt for a two hundred ton mill, which should produce from 50 to 75 tons of zinc per week. This would of course take only a small part of the fifty acres, and there is plenty of room on this tract for three or four other mills of the same size. The tract has good mines on both sides of [illegible] one of the best located properties in the district and if handled in the right way, will make all kinds of money.

I am a [illegible] miner [illegible] have spent a good many years working [illegible] mines in the [illegible] I also know personally the men [illegible] your company [illegible] know that they [illegible] as anybody and [illegible] people as I do, I want to carry all the stock that I am able to in your company. Yours [illegible]
FRANK SHORT.

CONFLICT IS FIERCE AND FAST THROUGHOUT

By Julian Hawthorne.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 17.—The [illegible] ended with neither side scoring. The sun, which had entertained hopes of seeing the Yale-Princeton game early in the forenoon, was shut out by envious clouds by 1 o'clock and even, gray light fell upon one of the great battlefields of the year.

There was not breeze enough to endanger the flame of a match. The gridiron looked reasonably dry with only a few traces of the straw blanket on the side lines. Additions to the regular stands had been constructed for the benefit of the overflow crowd and the crowd began to arrive early.

After squeezing one's way through the throng on the main street of the town, however, it was hard to believe that even standing room would be left by kick-off time.

The town had made valiant preparations to fill so far as possible the 30,000 or more empty stands which the thirty-four special trains kept pouring forth. Pretty girls munched rosy cheeked apples on the street corners. Cavaliers produced biscuits and peanuts out of their overcoat pockets. Head and shoulders were seen at the windows of the hotels. Automobiles and carriages piled up and down in the [illegible] and almost everybody had flags and most of them bore the insignia of the Tiger.

Odds Saved Princeton.

The odds, however, at the start were [illegible] in favor of Princeton and those who had bet their money on either side felt uncomfortable. Yale's advantage in weight was discounted by the doubt whether weight would count for much in the new game and the alleged superior team work of the Tigers was somewhat diminished by [illegible] power by the

YOUNG FOOTBALL WARRIORS HURT IN FRAY ON GRIDIRON

From Many Fields in Greater Boston Stretchers Carry Victims Home to Parents

It was said late last night by policemen and hospital attendants and surgeons that more small boys were hurt yesterday at football in Greater Boston than had ever before been attended for the same causes. From almost every gridiron they were carried off. Some of the youngsters were put to rights in hospital out-patient departments or doctors' offices. Only three cases, [illegible] were of enough seriousness to warrant the police being called in.

The most serious appears to be the case of [illegible] Hapeny of No. 423 Somerville avenue, in Somerville, whose right leg was broken. He was hurried to the Somerville City Hospital, where at an early hour this morning he was said to be resting comfortably.

A broken leg was also the lot of William [illegible], ten years old, who lives with his parents at No. 372 Dudley street. He was injured while at play with other boys on the vacant lot at No. 117 Mount [illegible] street. An ambulance carried [illegible]

BOY SHOT THROUGH STOMACH, WALKS MILE TO SURGEON

Arthur French of Dedham in Critical State as Result of Accidental Wound

After having accidentally shot himself through the stomach, 16-year-old Richard French of Dedham walked over a mile to a doctor's office, suffering excruciating agony. He was hurried to the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, and his condition last night was critical.

Young French went on a hunting trip yesterday. He carried a powerful spring trigger rifle. He spied a squirrel in a tree top, pounded the trunk of the tree with the butt of his gun, hoping to dislodge the animal, and the gun exploded.

The bullet entered French's stomach and passed through his body, lodging close to the skin in his back. Although almost overcome by pain the boy quickly stanched the flow of blood and walked to the office of Dr. John W. Trott, about one mile distant. After making a hasty examination of the wound, Dr. Trott sent the boy to the hospital. Young French is the son of Arthur B. French.

PASTOR WHO HIT NEWPORT GAMBLING MAY LEAVE CHURCH

Newport, R. I., Nov. 17.—The Rev. Walter M. Lowrie, formerly of Pawtucket, [illegible] now rector of the [illegible] Trinity Episcopal Church this city, which is the Summer place of worship of the Vanderbilts, Astors, Searses, Berwinds and other families of wealth and society, may accept a call to St. Paul's Church, Rome. It is [illegible] his attacks on gambling [illegible] among [illegible] who are among his parishioners.

"[illegible] could maintain itself in honor if it should expressly [illegible] gambling on Sunday afternoons. For my part, I am convinced that this [illegible] and the prevalent spirit of gambling which it has incited has done a far greater injury to Newport than could be done by the worst city government. I should [illegible] your respect as a preacher of the gospel if for any motive I were capable of [illegible] over such a plague."

Asked whether he would accept the call to Rome, he said:

"I do not know yet what I shall do. I realize that my remarks about gambling have made me enemies here who may want me to leave. However, I like Newport very much."

USE DYNAMITE BOMBS TO DRIVE NEGRO FROM LAIR

Volunteers Promptly Respond to Call for Assistance in Tracking Desperado, to Catch Him "Dead or Alive"

Rockland, Me., Nov. 17.—Despite the fact that Governor William T. Cobb of Maine has taken charge of the hunt for Minot St. Clair Francis, the negro convict who escaped from the Thomaston State prison several days ago, it is almost certain that the man has once more made his escape.

To make it certain whether he is still in hiding in the swamps on Beauchamp Point, Warden Bert O. Norton, acting under the suggestion of Lieutenant E. J. Scully of the Naval Reserves, Portland, is going to throw dynamite bombs into the place and drive the desperate man into the open if he is still concealed there.

It is believed that Francis broke through the strong cordon around [illegible] Point early to-day before [illegible] broke and is now on his way [illegible] by way of the west shore of [illegible] Bay. Two boys reported [illegible] a negro in that vicinity [illegible] Mrs. Higgins [illegible] Belfast road [illegible] that Francis [illegible] was much like his description, had begged her for [illegible] to eat. Harvard [illegible] Dartmouth at football yesterday, 22 to 9, in a wonderfully interesting game, but [illegible] a team of seven freshmen and four older boys can score twice against the Crimson, what can Yale do to the Cambridge eleven next Saturday at New Haven? NEW PLAYS IN BRILLIANT VARIETY MARK THRILLING DARTMOUTH-HARVARD GAME

By I. S. Clark.

Most pronounced in the Dartmouth-Harvard game contest was the use by both teams of the latest methods in advancing the ball to gain ground, namely the onside kick and the forward pass. In the thirty-one points scored by both teams these additions to the rules were indirectly responsible.

Their development was seen at the very highest point of perfection and their use [illegible] was manifest.

To Dartmouth's success in scoring twice against the Crimson can be attributed the persistency in utilizing the forward pass, which proved conclusively that a weaker team thus can increase its chances of making headway when nothing else will succeed.

Another factor in Dartmouth's favor was the presence of a goal kicker whose equal has not been seen in the Stadium this season. Six times Little McDevitt tried for field goals. One passed squarely over the uprights, the misses being at hard angles, and in one instance the ball sailed a few feet below the bar after a magnificent effort from the 40-yard line.

Whenever Dartmouth got within the shadow of the Crimson line the try for goal from the field was sure to be on tap, and discretion was used when to work the kick.

Fierce Harvard Rushes.

Harvard got fooled badly on Dartmouth's second score, when, instead of trying for a field goal, a forward pass was made [illegible] it possible to score a touchdown from the twenty-five-yard line where McDevitt stood when he received the ball for a kick.

Only twice did Harvard [illegible] rushing [illegible] the scoring was supplemented by the pass or onside kick.

[illegible]

Up to Dartmouth's three-yard line went the heavy Crimson team, tearing off the space by a series of [illegible] at the centre of the line. [illegible] offside play halted the ball, and Newhall went back to try for a drop kick. [illegible] the trick in the contest after which was exasperating to the Dartmouth stands [illegible] the Crimson backs [illegible] points.

It was [illegible] ball a rolling [illegible] the kick off as he ran [illegible] back thirty-eight yards, almost to midfield.

Kicked to McDevitt.

Newhall did not wait to rush after the first attempt [illegible] but kicked to McDevitt, who was caught on his [illegible] yard line. A forward pass netted eight yards [illegible]

[illegible]

The ball was passed to Lincoln, who tossed it to Newhall, who in turn heaved it away [illegible]

With the score 10 to 0 against them the Dartmouth boys were not [illegible] but went in harder [illegible] even.

Time was called for the end of the half [illegible] anything could materialize for [illegible]

When the whistle blew for the second half Parker, the Harvard centre, was replaced by Fraser, which [illegible] affected [illegible]

It was evident that the addition of second string players in the Harvard team weakened it somewhat.

"Every dog has his day" is an old say [illegible] from the success of the show under the auspices of the Boston Terrier Club, which closed its four days' exhibition in Mechanics building last evening. However, in only a single instance did an accident of the kind occur, when the victim reported at the office. He did not leave his name, nor is it known to the officials which of the dogs bit him.

Of the sales reported yesterday were the following: Frank F. Dole of New Haven, Ct., bought of C. H. Moore, proprietor of the Auburn Kennels, Burlington, Vt., the thirteen-months-old dog Auburn Rio, by Ted IV., out of Auburn Beauty. He weighs eighteen pounds and is counted a coming bench winner. Mr. Moore is in another deal that is hanging fire. He purchased of Mrs. Benjamin Weaver of Newport, Ayrault Happy, by Nobleman, out of Lovekins, for $400. After the bargain had been made Mrs. Weaver took the dog home with her, but notified Mr. Moore he could have the dog by sending the money to her, which he says he certainly will do the first of this week. Ayrault Happy won the fourth prize in the puppy class on the opening day of the show.

EAST TRIUMPHS OVER WEST

Whirlwind Plays of the Quaker Eleven Prove Too Much for Westerners.

Philadelphia, Nov. 17.—In one of the greatest gridiron battles ever waged on Franklin Field the University of Pennsylvania eleven defeated Michigan by the score of 17 to 0, in the presence of 22,000 spectators.

The famous Westerners started with a cyclonic rush and for the first ten minutes they had the Red and Blue in a desperate fight. The Michigan carried the ball to Penney's 30-yard line and the Quakers only checked them by a magnificent rally. Then Penn fought Michigan evenly. Greene and Garrels had a punting duel which will live long in the minds of those who saw it. The Quaker captain did not permit his rival to gain an inch and the newly discovered wonder, Quarterback Lawrence, beat Bishop in back-field punting and catching.

After twenty minutes of terrific playing Pennsylvania battered her way to midfield. Leven then galloped twenty yards on a forward pass and "Big Bill" Hollenback skirted Michigan's left end and was not stopped until Workman caught him on Michigan's one-yard line.

Garrels was thrown nearly every time, but secured the ball for a loss. Yost's whirlwind team play was crushed by the Red and Blue before it could gather speed. As the game progressed, the Wolverines weakened, but fought gamely to check Pennsylvania.

Every instant the Red and Blue quickened her pace and under a stop watch, Lawrence averaged five plays a minute. This was more than Michigan could stand. The first half ended with the score 6 to 0, in Penn's favor.

In the second half, Penn fought with a vigor and vim, which characterized her work against Brown. Michigan tried her ends and lines, and a great variety of trick plays, but all in vain. Greene began to outkick Garrels, and the Westerners' play became ragged, but desperate.

Penn sent Greene across the line for two touchdowns in the second half as the result of some magnificent line plunging. Not once could Michigan halt them and the Quakers suffered more through penalties than through the Westerners' strength.

With a score 17 to 0 against them, Michigan still fought desperately, while Penn, determined for revenge of a season's misplays, attempted to crush her opponents with as big a score as possible. The play increased in quickness and strength, and towards the end the Quakers struggled as though they had only a scant lead. Only two changes were made, one for each team. Penn sent Lavery [illegible] to relieve Gaston, and Rumney took Bishop's place for Michigan.

The Michigan [illegible] who came east to witness what they [illegible] to be a sure victory, cheered [illegible] for nearly an hour after the game [illegible] body loyal, far from being outdone [illegible] to the heart of the town and made merry.

Losers Have One Opportunity to Score on Field Goal Try.

Providence, Nov. 17.—Brown took no chance of disabling any of her ground gainers for the Dartmouth game next Saturday, and used several substitutes in the contest with Vermont this afternoon, which she won, 12—0. The visitors were not regarded as a strong eleven, but surprised even themselves by their playing. Brown started things with a rush and in less than two minutes carried the ball to the one-yard line, but was penalized for off side playing and forced to kick. Soon the ball was again on the great line, but the Brown [illegible] were over anxious and lost on another penalty.

Holden ran the team in a capable manner, but his inexperience was evident and the services of Captain Schwartz were greatly missed. Vermont took desperate chances with forward passes, and repeatedly worked them for large gains. Brown's goal was never in danger, however, and the only chance Vermont had to score was lost when White missed a try for a field goal from 60-yard line.

Brown's scores were made on straight line bucking, when the backs failed to gain, Kirley and Hazard were rushed through for downs every time. Watkins and Keislick with a delayed pass made large gains for Vermont round the Brown ends, and not till the latter part of the game did the locals seem able to circumvent the play.

When the result of the Harvard-Dartmouth game was announced, the Brown crowd let itself loose and cheered lustily at the defeat of their great rivals. The [illegible]

The resourcefulness of the entire Yale eleven, taking lightning-like advantage of fumbles and nervousness on Harvard's part worked the spectators to a high pitch of excitement. The game was clean throughout in plays.

Yale scored her first touchdown on clear forward passing [illegible] on an onside kick, the third a blocked kick followed by Coy's sensational run, the fourth on Harvard's full back's attempt at forward pass from behind the goal line when Philbourn intercepted the pass and fought his way across the line, and the fifth by short rushes through the centre for 20 yards. Amherst and Williams Unable to Score in Their Annual Gridiron Battle

Special to Boston Sunday American.

Amherst, Nov. 17.—In a very close and exciting game here to-day, neither Amherst nor Williams was able to score during two twenty-minute halves of play. Both teams were hampered by the condition of the field, which was wet and very soggy.

In the first half, the ball exchanged hands frequently, both teams punting again and again. Amherst gained her ground with Hubbard carrying the ball and twice worked the forward pass to advantage with Hubbard and the ends, netting gains of fifteen and seventeen yards. Williams made her gains by pounding the line just back of the goal line. The half closed with Amherst in possession of the ball on her own forty-yard line.

In the second half the ball see-sawed from one side to the other, Williams having a little advantage. Toward the middle of the half Beach ran ninety-five yards for what seemed to be a touchdown, but was found to have been offside at the twenty-five-yard line. Hubbard formed a beautiful interference. In this half Williams gained her ground through the line by the onside kick. Amherst's gains were made through Hubbard's punting.

The game closed with the ball on Amherst's seventeen-yard line in Williams' possession. There was a large delegation from Williams, and one of the features of the game was the singing of [illegible] leges. The summary:

Dorchester Loses Game to Rindge by One Point

Dorchester High went down to defeat before the strong Rindge Manual Training School team of Cambridge, in the most exciting game seen on the Dunbar avenue grounds, Dorchester, this season, by the small score of 6 to 5.

Dorchester surprised her supporters in the first half, playing Rindge to a standstill, neither side having any advantage, and both teams having to punt frequently, the ball being in the centre of the field at the close of the half in Rindge's possession.

Both Rindge and Dorchester scored their points in the second half. Griffin kicked off for Rindge to Campbell, who was downed in his tracks. Riley was forced to punt to McKenzie. Rindge sent her backs against Dorchester without success, Griffin being forced to punt from the 25-yard line. Dorchester seemed dazed, leaving the ball touch the ground before any of her men could nail it, Watkins catching the ball on the bound and scoring the first touchdown for Rindge. Griffin kicked the goal.

Riley of Dorchester kicked off to Watkins, who was downed without gain. Rindge lost the ball on next play to Dorchester by a fumble. Dorchester then tried the forward pass twice, Hoernle to Riley to Leonard for large gains, Leonard finally scoring. Riley failed to kick the goal. The summary:

MALDEN HIGH, 30;
WORCESTER, 5.

Malden, Mass., Nov. 17.—Malden High walloped the Worcester High team on the athletic field here this afternoon, the score being 30 to 5. Quarterback kicks, forward passes and long runs were the features of the game, Malden being the most conspicuous in these plays. Malden's star halfback Clark shone all through the game and with McInnis and Cox pulled off the prettiest plays of the game. Clark's run of 105 yards for a touchdown on the kickoff was the prettiest piece of work ever accomplished on the local gridiron.

LYNN DEFEATS THE GORHAMS AND NOW TIES FOR LEAD.

Lynn, Nov. 17.—In one of the best exhibitions of soccer football, Lynn defeated the Gorham's of Providence, 2 to 1, at Ocean Park this afternoon and tied the leaders in the New England Soccer Foot ball League. PORTLAND AND BANGOR TIE

Portland, Nov. 17.—Maine's big high school game of the year between Portland and Bangor High resulted in no score for either team here this afternoon before a record breaking crowd of high school students and supporters from all over the State. This is the second time this year that the two teams have played to a standstill.

YALE TEAM VICTOR IN BIG GUN SHOOT

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 17.—The Yale gun team won the intercollegiate gun shoot here this afternoon with a score of 208 points. BROTHERS GRIDIRON RIVALS

Worcester, Nov. 17.—A. F. Cottrell, tackle, of Tiverton, R. I., was this afternoon elected captain of the Worcester Tech football team for next year. As his brother, James L. Cottrell, has been elected to lead Worcester Academy next year, the contest for supremacy next year between the brothers will be interesting.

MOUNT PLEASANT WON GAME FOR INDIANS

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 17.—The Carlisle Indians to-day humbled the pride of Minnesota, premier western football team, by a score of seventeen to nothing. The Indians won because they had a star drop kicker. Mount Pleasant was the deciding factor. He dropped goals almost every time he passed the mid-field line, and Minnesota never had a chance to even up.

It was a slugging contest, and roughness marred it several times. Finally the umpire took a hand and put the offenders out. The margin of weight was not as great as between Minnesota and Chicago, and what there was, appeared mostly on paper.

FALL RIVER ROVERS SCORE EASILY

Pawtucket, Nov. 17.—The Fall River Rovers had everything their own way here this afternoon with the Howard & Bulloughs. The Spindle City boys played all around the locals and kept the ball in opponents' territory most of the time. In trying to protect the ball near his own goal Whewell accidentally turned the ball between the posts, giving the Rovers first score. The summary:

1907 CARS ARE SIMILAR TO MODELS OF 1906.

DELIVERY OF MACHINES WILL NOT BE EARLY

BY J. C. KERRISON.

So far as can be gleaned from the 1907 models which have [illegible] the past month or [illegible] ral changes or [illegible] of 1906. This [illegible] the fact that mach[illegible] a state of perfection [illegible] now estab lished on such succe[illegible] in other than mere [illegible] of metal are not absolutely nec[illegible] experiences gained by all of the [illegible] facturers have been such that, [illegible] to try and improve, they are [illegible] than ever to stick to [illegible] proven successful in the past [illegible] to place on the market a [illegible] any features which have [illegible] successful. In other words, instead [illegible] experiments on the market [illegible] the public discover the value of these same innovations, if such they may be termed, are tried out in private and [illegible] into the market until they have by actual experience been proven valuable.

This, at least, is a step in the right direction, a step far in advance of a few years ago, when owing to the hustle and activity and the great demand for motors manufacturers placed untried cars on the market. Not so to-day. The demand for cars is greater. Still the manufacturers to a man are inclined to take no chances in placing anything but the very best on the market, the result being that within the last two years motor cars have become more standardized than was imagined they ever would come. The well-beaten path is now travelled consistently and with great advantage to the manufacturer and user alike.

Runabout Holds Its Own.

The runabout seems to hold its own in popularity; in fact if anything the demand has been constantly increasing, and to meet this the manufacturers have taken occasion to place high-powered runabouts on the market. The touring car, both the [illegible] and the high-priced, are shown in greater or less numbers. The demand for the moderate priced [illegible] has become too great [illegible] consequently several firms have added a medium priced car [illegible] construct nothing but the [illegible]

Demand for Closed Carriages.

There is to be a much greater demand than ever for limousines [illegible] This is presaged by [illegible] for limousines and by the fact that it is rapidly becoming the proper thing for one to buy a chassis with a touring and a limousine body, either of which can be used as desired. AUTO RUN GREENFIELD TO NORTH ADAMS.

Copyright, 1906, by [illegible]

VIGOROUS TRIP FOR AUTOISTS THIS TIME OF YEAR.

Tour from Greenfield to North Adams Good Test for Machines.

A trip which will prove decidedly pleasant and interesting in the Summer, but particularly strenuous at this season of the year, when the wintry blasts howl over the ravines and through the mountains, is that through the Berkshires from Greenfield to North Adams. This trip as mapped [illegible] call forth the power of any car and [illegible] beyond all question the ability [illegible] of the same. The trip to [illegible] was taken in the BOSTON AMERICAN of Sunday, October 7, so that the map of to-day will start at the latter point and carry one over the Hoosac Tunnel [illegible] some of the greatest wooded [illegible] of Massachusetts, to North Adams. [illegible] leaves Greenfield by following Shelburne street direct to the town of Shelburne [illegible] road, although referred to as [illegible] a winding road, [illegible] no confusion forks, and [illegible] can be followed without any [illegible] At Shelburne the right turn is [illegible] following the Deerfield River to Shelburne Falls. Here take the bridge across the river and follow the railroad for a short distance, bearing left. Then cross the river and continue north through East Charlemont and Charlemont [illegible] beyond the latter cross the river and follow along to Hoosac Tunnel station. Here [illegible] left up heavy grades over the Hoosac Mountain to Florida, which is [illegible] the highest point in the State. [illegible] climb is a hard, stiff one, and [illegible] proper handling of a motor it can [illegible] accomplished.

At Florida begins the down grade which should be taken with caution. Telephone poles mark the road to Eclipse dam. There [illegible] Union street and follow along to Eagle street. Turn left on Eagle street, and two blocks beyond turn into Main street and follow direct to business section of North Adams.

SIX-TON TRUCK WILL HAVE HARD TEST ON ROADS.

The six-ton truck now nearing completion in the Winton factory will be displayed at the New York show, but prior to that time it will be submitted to many severe tests, one of which will probably be that of carrying a full load under it own power over the roads from Cleveland to New York. This will assuredly be a strenuous trial, especially since January roads are unlikely to have that boulevard character which they sometimes present in Summer. This big truck has a platform space of ninety-eight feet, and is equipped with regular Winton motors. The Winton Company has used trucks of its own manufacture for five years past and has also supplied service wagons to the government, so that its latest production in the truck line embodies a variety of features which experience have shown to be desirable.

NEW JOKE ON THE POOR AUTO

Among the many other things that will be charged up against the innocent automobile is that it is stealing the notoriety, in story, of the "Irishman who just came over to this country." The motor car is now getting by far the lion's share of the current jokes.

The latest, however, comes from John L. Poole of the Aero Car Company. He was recently at the factory, and while there made a run with a party of friends in one of their new light touring cars, to one of the smaller towns some fifty miles from Detroit. A stop was made before the return and a small-sized made-over rural crowd soon gathered about the car at the curb.

One elderly gentleman who had made some money [illegible] looked on in silence for a [illegible] then commanded the attention of the by-standers with this remark: "I don't [illegible] of this e're otomowbill bizne[illegible] I got a barn down here I rent to some fo[illegible] wot runs an otogarbage, and they ain't paid me no rent since they moved in."

BLAMES THE MOTOR CARS.

An eminent nerve specialist and alienist, Dr. L. P. Clark, is authority for debiting two new prospective plagues to the automobile. He says that speedy motoring causes loss of memory and alcoholism. This is not so hard to believe if the alcoholism is conceived as coming first. After it has arrived most drivers forget not only the roads, but the rules of them. Alcoholism has been blamed to everything, even to religion and good nature, and Dr. Clark is not so rough on the motor car, after all.

Reed-Underhill Co. Has Handled Knox Car Since 1901 With Big Success

When one stops and considers the many changes that have been rung on the local automobile trade since its first inception it cannot help but realize that it has been a case of the survival of the fittest. Change after change can be recalled. Firms have come. Firms have gone. New agencies and new managers have appeared frequently, but throughout all the turmoil and business strife some few firms have remained the same.

These firms can really be counted on the fingers of one hand, namely, the Reed-Underhill Company, Alvan T. Fuller and Frederick E. Randall. These are the three pioneers who have virtually retained the same personnel since the introduction or inception, whichever you like, of the automobile trade in Boston. They have seen the others, such as Harry Fosdick and J. H. MacAlman, who were with them in the very early days, change berths, one to go into business for himself and the other to handle another line of goods. They have likewise seen the gradual increase of motor establishments, until now there are five for every one automobile concern that existed six years ago.

Oldest of Pioneers.

The oldest of the pioneers now doing business without any change in its personnel or the make of the product it handles is the Reed-Underhill company. In February, 1901, A. P. Underhill started out with what was the first Knox car ever constructed.

It was of the three-wheeled variety and attracted no small amount of attention. Then an automobile was a rarity, and especially so the gasoline explosion, the steam variety then predominating.

When a man started out for a motor drive in those days he did so with fear and trepidation. The chances of his walking back were greater than those that he would drive his car home.

The popular prejudice was great. The lack of understanding of a motor car was greater. The work of the pioneer was to blaze away for himself and his product. How successful this was done by this firm is shown by its present standing in the motor world. The three wheel was a practical proposition. Still it was a curiosity and it was freely predicted that it never would gain a foothold. This original Knox car, however, brought out what is considered by many as the first real adaptation of the three-point suspension idea, which has since become so generally adopted by the trade.

Their Car a Success.

George G. Reed soon became associated with Mr. Underhill, and in the fall of the same year the Reed-Underhill Company was organized, and it is in existence today. In the five intervening years this company has handled the Knox car with thorough regularity and no small amount of success. It has always been a strong air-cooled proposition, and that it made no mistake in its line of vehicles is eminently shown by the excellent business it transacted last year, as well as by the success the latest Knox car is receiving.

The Reed-Underhill Company was also a pioneer in the commercial as well as the pleasure vehicle line. It has done its share towards developing what will in the future prove to be a particularly strong branch of the motor world.

With the same acumen that characterized its entry into the motor trade this firm has gone forth into the transportation line, it having established a passenger line in the mining district of Nevada. Some few months ago the company established a passenger service in that State and so successful has it proven that G. G. Reed is now West looking toward the development of greater fields in that direction.

Newly Married Couple Race to Escape Friends

A veritable Vanderbilt road race, in which five high-powered and speedy cars, each operated by both daring and clever experts, caused no end of excitement all the way from East Saugus to Boston late Friday night. It was a race, indeed, in which foreign and domestic cars competed. Singular though it may seem, the contest was between Fiat and Thomas cars, those two rivals of the real Vanderbilt.

It was a race of a lifetime; an effort of the recently wedded to get away from their friends and tormenters. In the first car, a Fiat limousine, were Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln D. Robbins, who a few hours before had entered the seas of matrimony. The fine limousine was bountifully and beautifully decorated with crepe paper, gotten up as befits such an occasion. In the other cars were Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Fosdick and other close friends of Mr. Robbins and his bride, nee Aimee Louise Stocker of East Saugus.

It was a hard run all the way from East Saugus, and at one time Mr. Robbins thought he had so far distanced his pursuers as to enable him to stop to remove the exterior decorations of his car. He was mistaken, however, for hardly had he stopped his car than the others came up with him, the result being that additional decorations were given the car. The chase was renewed and all speed laws were recognized only in their breach.

No matter where he turned the five Thomas cars with their happy freight were at his heels, and after frightening all the police in the city, Mr. and Mrs. Robbins were forced to draw up to their hotel amidst the cheering of their friends, the tooting of horns and the noise made by the opening of mufflers. Surely they had had a ride, pleasant indeed, but strenuous to a degree. All their plans had been made in secret. Greater surprise was given the couple yesterday, however, for as they started off for their wedding trip the same jolly party was at the depot to wish them bon voyage on their southern trip. Mr. and Mrs. Robbins are to stop a few days at the New Willard in Washington and then proceed South.

A. C. OF A. WILL HAVE FINE LOCATION FOR SHOW.

Will Be in Heart of Theatrical, Retail and Residential Sections of New York.

There is one advantage the Automobile Club of America will have in connection with the automobile show which will be held in the Grand Central Palace, New York, during the week of December 1 to 8, and that is accessability of location. The Grand Central Palace, which is on Lexington avenue, between Forty-third and Forty-fourth streets, or just around the corner from the Grand Central railroad station where the New York Central and New Haven railroads have their terminus. This is in the heart of the theatrical, residential and retail sections of the city, and can readily be reached from either the surface, subway or elevated street railroad systems. The new terminal passenger station of the Grand Central railroad system, which will be completed in a few days, will be on the ground floor of the Grand Central Palace building, so that all that an out-of-town visitor coming from New England, Westchester, the West or Hudson River towns will have to do will be to step from the train to an elevator or walk up one flight of stairs to find himself in the exhibition hall without putting foot in the street.

AERO CLUB'S DISPLAY AT AUTO SHOW IN NEW YORK.

In conjunction with the Automobile Club show in New York, the Aero Club will hold the most complete exhibition of balloons and airships ever held in America, where everything new and novel in the aeronautic line from wind wagons to aeroplanes and flapping wing machines will be on view. Here Roy Knabenshue is going to exhibit for the first time his new aeroplane and motor, which weighs only a trifle over three pounds per horsepower, while Leo Stevens will show two new airships and the "California Arrow."

Dr. Julian Thomas will probably exhibit the balloons "Nirvana" and "America" and the airship he purchased from Major Miller. The Curtis Manufacturing Company of Hammondsport, N. Y., will exhibit a wind wagon in which a fan propeller is used for power, while Professor Pickering of Harvard will show a bicycle which will be propelled by similar means. Henry Rademeyer of Jersey City expects to astonish the natives with what he calls a "Flapping Wing" machine in which he tries to imitate the flight of a bird, and will also show two novel kites.

G. Curtis Gillespie of this city will exhibit two full-sized flying machines and M. B. Sellers of Fire Cay, Ky., will show a big kite of extraordinary lifting power. In addition there will be Lieutenant Lahm's balloon "United States," which won the recent international race for the Gordon Bennett cup, while the Aero Club will show "Orient" and "Centaur."

MAXWELL CO. LOOKS FOR A NEW PLANT

The committee of the board of directors of the Maxwell Company is looking for a location for the plant which the Maxwell-Briscoe Motor Company contemplates erecting in Indiana, it being the intention to make this an ideal automobile manufacturing plant. The ambition of the officers of the company being to make it the finest in equipment that is possible, with a floor space of approximately 350,000 square feet, most of which will be one-story buildings of the latest saw tooth roof construction. The building will probably be erected of steel-reinforced concrete.

Chicago, Nov. 17.—For the few years that automobiles have been in the public eye the Cadillac car has earned a reputation for reliability over 15,000 cars of this make have been sold and are still in use in America. Their performances have been admired and have justly gained a place in popular favor.

LICENSED HANDBOOK NEARLY READY

Announcement was made by the Handbook Committee of the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers that owing to completion of all next year's models the handbook would undoubtedly be ready for distribution by December 1st, instead of in April as last year.

It [illegible] and more complete edition than its predecessors, and prospective buyers would do well to wait for its issue. The early date for publishing the handbook makes it evident that by the middle of December all models produced by the licensed manufacturers will be ready, which promises to make the Seventh National Automobile Show, to be held at Madison Square Garden January 12th-19th, even more interesting than any held in the past six years.

PATENT SUITS ARE NOW NEARING END

It makes things interesting at this time, when the trade is so conspicuously divided into two camps and the show of the makers not licensed under the Selden patent is imminent to get the news straight from the United States Court, that the infringement suits under this famous patent which have been going on for three years are drawing to a close. Little remains except the summing up and giving the case to the court. It is understood that only one appeal is possible, but neither side counts much on a reversion of the first decision, which is likely to be handed down in a few months.

A. P. UNDERHILL AND FRANK CROCKETT IN A 1907 KNOX

STEARNS'S TOURING CAR MODEL FOR 1907 NOW HERE.

The A. E. Morrison Company of 92 and 94 Massachusetts avenue have received their new 1907 model of the Stearns touring car, which is being greatly admired by the many who have been for the past few weeks patiently, or rather impatiently, awaiting its arrival. In general outward appearance the new model follows the lines of foreign construction, the engine and frame having been [illegible] last [illegible].

The engine bonnet is of the Mercedes type, the dash is [illegible] and the body is designed to carry seven people. A large Pullman body with revolving chairs will also be supplied. The wheel base is 120 inches. The final drive is by double chains to the rear wheels, and the chains are inclosed in waterproof casings. The axles, both front and rear, are of heavy drop forged steel of I-beam section. The engine is rated at 30 horsepower. The valves are large, and are all operated by a single cam shaft. The oiling is by a gear driven positive feed system and is [illegible] beside the engine beneath the bonnet, leaving the dash perfectly free of oilers of any description.

The carburetor is of a special design similar to one used on a well-known foreign car, which enables the car to be operated on the high gear at a very low rate of speed. There is a double system of ignition. All bearings are of the imported Hess-Bright type. All gears are inclosed in oil-tight aluminum casings. The transmission is of the sliding gear, selective, four speeds and reverse type, with direct drive on the fourth speed.

COMING TOURNEY AT ORMOND WILL BE GREATEST EVER.

Interest Already Aroused Presages Fast Time at Florida Beach Meet.

Realizing that the forthcoming Ormond meet really marks a crisis in the world of motor racing, W. J. Morgan and those associated with him in the same will put forth their best efforts in proving that on the east coast of Florida as nowhere else in all this world [illegible] motorists secure speed and honest competition. Heretofore the management of [illegible] has been blamed for considerable that was not its fault. It has usually been handicapped at the very start by [illegible] friction generated through petty [illegible]. These, it is to be hoped, will [illegible] although there has been [illegible] talk regarding "freak [illegible]."

Such talk is entirely unnecessary and [illegible] sportsmanlike. The entire matter [illegible] be eliminated by the management of the Ormond tourney specifying [illegible] of the different events. They must [illegible] have certain of the events [illegible] world so that steam [illegible] against gasoline cars of one power or ability. [illegible] in all fairness to many of those who have spent thousands of dollars and [illegible] of hard work to bring about results.

Although no definite announcement of this decision has been made public, it is understood that such is the case, and that within the next few days some [illegible] statements will be made public.

Senator Morgan [illegible] during the week [illegible] some public statement. The [illegible] out last Sunday leaves the association no alternative in the matter. It must accept all entries made according to the printed conditions.

The interest that the American manufacturers are showing in the forthcoming tourney is greater than has been [illegible] since the tournament was first inaugurated. The [illegible] interest presages [illegible] amount of competition and fast work. With the [illegible] Vanderbilt cup at the [illegible] to do combat with the speed [illegible] of the old world, there should indeed be [illegible] great work, greater in fact than ever before.

SIX-CYLINDER CARS IN ENGLAND

In discussing the tendency of the leading European and American manufacturers toward the six-cylinder type of engines for their highest priced 1907 cars, a prominent importer says that he has been surprised at the number of British manufacturers who will market six cylinder cars next year. A London friend of his has written to him giving some particulars of the cars that are to be exhibited at the Olympia Show in the English metropolis this month. A number of conservative British engineering firms, with reputations of never marketing anything before it is thoroughly tried out, have just announced six cylinder models.

Quality Is Keynote in 1907 Thomas Forty-Horse

The Thomas forty-horse has proven to be a veritable full sister to the sixty. It is a machine that possesses power and speed in plenty, gives every indication of being a thoroughbred fully up to the Thomas standard, and withal is most attractive in appearance. Like the majority of demonstration cars that have arrived in [illegible] to say the least. The mechanism is excellent in its construction and finish, and the car should cater to the demands for a light speedy touring car. The Harry Fosdick Company is fully satisfied with the results that have been attained since the car reached this city.

The car is of 40-horse-power, with mechanically operated valves. The carburetor is automatic, while the oiling is positive feed pump splash system. The transmission is sliding gear, selective type, with three speeds forward and reverse, with shaft drive. The front axle is drop-forged I beam, while the rear is of the semi-floating bevel gear type, with truss rod on under side. The clutch is cast aluminum and leather cones with springs, insuring con[illegible] fit.

Not a single detail of the car but what has been given thoughtful consideration and care, the result being a finished product, in which quality, not quantity, seems to have been the keynote.

BELGIAN CAR TO BE MADE HERE

The prediction that Americans will not keep on buying imported automobiles indefinitely but will purchase cars made in this country which are replicas of high grade European machines is strengthened by the announcements that the famous Belgian car, the Pipe, is to be manufactured in this country.

REPORTS SHOW A.A.A. IN HEALTHY SHAPE

Treasurer George E. Farrington, of the American Automobile Association, reports the organization to be in a very healthy condition and ready to engage upon bigger work than ever. Mr. Farrington drives an imported car, but believes in supporting the American national body.

B. General appearance and finish of body work
C. Absence of smell and smoke
D. Absence of leakage of lubricant
E. Absence of noise with car stationary or running
F. Absence of vibration with car stationary or running
G. Smoothness of running and comfort of passengers
H. Ease of cleaning
J. Ease of access for repair
K. Ease of starting
L. Ease of stopping and speed changing without jerks or noise
M. Ease of manoeuvring
N. Comfort of passengers
O. Comfort of driver

Of the twenty-four entrants in the class in which the White was entered (cars costing over £600), no other car received a gold medal except an electric machine. Had "radius of action" been considered, the White alone would have received the official "O. K."

ANGLER HOME FIRST IN HANDICAP AT BENNINGS.

At a few minutes before two the music and cheering begin and the Yale team [illegible] the ground and gathers in a [illegible] centre for a final practice. What a set of athletes! You would think they were unbeatable. But wait for [illegible]. Meanwhile Roome exhibits [illegible] kicks. He has not the aspect of an [illegible]

[illegible] the Tigers, and from the [illegible] breaks forth a roar to [illegible] They look smaller than Yale, but their activity is something [illegible] and there are among them two or three giants able to hold their own against anything.

Yale in Position at 2:05 O'Clock.

Two o'clock five minutes Yale take their places at the north end. The ball is placed on the little pile of sand in the centre. The Tigers line up behind. It is their kickoff, as Rulon Miller sends the ball over the east side line. He must try again. Off it sails again. Jones has it and is down after a five yards. The next moment it is on Princeton's thirty yard [illegible] a fumble, a run on fake kick, and we are in the centre. A series of brilliant plays on both sides takes the ball to and fro with no permanent gain for either side.

Both Teams Penalized.

On her 25-yard line Yale is penalized for holding but just afterwards the Tigers suffer in the same way. The ball, by kicks and runs and [illegible] the line, moves out into Princeton's territory. A short kick and a fumble brings it back to the centre. But Yale has already shown immense strength in the line. They need more than that however, and now a splendid [illegible] by Princeton, followed by a kick [illegible] the ball on the five yard line of Yale.

It's a great game.

A pass and another run by Wister puts the ball on Yale's one yard line, but it must be brought back for holding. It is [illegible] one more [illegible] Yale is having [illegible] of [illegible] life. By [illegible] herculean efforts it is forced to Yale's forty yard line, and a [illegible] pass gains five yards more [illegible] upon the whole Yale is getting [illegible] the worst of it. We are back on Yale's fifty yard-line again and here is the first delay for Knox's bleeding face, which costs the Tigers a ten yard penalty.

Play Fast and Fierce.

There is now some very interesting playing in Princeton's territory, but the gains by straight football are small. Princeton is penalized five yards for off [illegible] another moment a penalty against Yale takes [illegible] ten back. A punt [illegible] the Tigers five yard line [illegible] their [illegible] and a kick transfers the struggle to the Tigers' twenty five-yard line. The play is very fast and fierce throughout.

At [illegible] charge, a punt to the Tiger's goal [illegible] where it is their ball. It is punted to [illegible] 35 yard line. Yale's kick sends it over the goal line. It is carried back ten yards and kicked into Yale territory; back [illegible] to Princeton's 25 yard line again; and the first half is over.

There is very little to choose between [illegible] evens and only one minute was [illegible] for repairs. All now depends upon which side has the most stamina left.

Second Half Begins.

Every seat in all the stands have been filled long since and thousands are on their feet behind the fence. The Princeton singers give us some very good singing, but there is little disposition on either side to [illegible] as yet. Princeton leads the way back to the gridiron with Yale close behind [illegible] kickoff. The ball finally lands on Yale's forty-five-yard line, and now they [illegible] as fierce as ever. Knox twice [illegible] himself and the ball is [illegible] to the Tigers' thirty yard line, only [illegible] punted back to Yale's thirty-five yard mark. Yale goes through the Tigers for ten yards, and then for five more [illegible] effort gets another five. Now [illegible] over the Tigers' goal, and is [illegible] back for a touchback. A kick [illegible] at Yale's forty-five-yard line, as Knox runs it back eighteen yards, a forward pass brings it to the Tigers' thirty-yard line and Knox is put out of the game. [illegible] cheers from Princeton benches. Yale is getting desperate.

After a pause of a few minutes with the ball in Yale's possession a scrimmage [illegible] five yards. A run gets five more. Yale is pushing the Tigers back, but is [illegible] fifteen yards for holding.

Yale Again on Defensive.

A punt for the Tigers goal, but is run [illegible] yards and the ball is then kicked [illegible] Princeton's 35 yard line, and the sun [illegible] shines out. At the same time, Rulon Miller runs 15 yards and Yale is once more on the defensive. Rulon Miller is hurt, but is soon in the game again. The Tigers [illegible]

They carry it through Yale for ten [illegible] one rush, and then for five, they [illegible] out of bounds on Yale's 25-yard line. It is kicked back, but Yale loses [illegible] for foul play. It is now on Yale's [illegible] A kick sent it back to the [illegible] of the field. The Tigers go through [illegible] 5 yards another 5 puts it on Yale's [illegible] yard [illegible]

[illegible] still very little to choose between [illegible] but Yale is playing rather [illegible] was expected. The ball is [illegible] yard line, after a series [illegible] plays the Tigers are penalized [illegible] and the ball is on Yale's [illegible] Yale runs fifteen yards [illegible] She goes through [illegible] and then five more. The [illegible] moment she adds still another. The [illegible] on the Tigers' fifteen yard [illegible] getting serious for Nassau [illegible] was penalized ten yards for interference. Referees sound the end of the [illegible] stage, with the ball on Princeton's [illegible] yard line, with the score 0 to 0, after a fiercely contested game.

The Game.

BOWDOIN ELEVEN DEFEATS MAINE

Victorious Players Superior in All Departments of Play.

Orono, Me., Nov. 17.—Bowdoin defeated University of Maine to-day 6 to 0, the winning eleven, after five minutes of play at the first of the game, scoring a touchdown. A fake punt netted Gastonguay thirty yards and a forward pass brought Bowdoin ten yards from Maine's goal, and the touchdown followed.

The visiting team was better in all departments and they ripped Maine's line almost at will, the playing being mostly confined within Maine's territory. Bowdoin's defence was admirable. Speake and Gastonguay excelled for Bowdoin; Talbot was Maine's best player and Hodgins was a good ground gainer. This game makes Bates champion of the State colleges. The summary:

SOMERVILLE PLAYS TO A TIE WITH ENGLISH HIGH.

Somerville and Boston English High had it out on Broadway Field yesterday afternoon, but neither was able to score a point at the end of two twenty-minute periods.

Somerville was held for down twice when within striking distance of their goal. English [illegible] Somerville on all her plays. The latter's line could not hold the Boston [illegible] time and again broke through and nailed the runner in his tracks. [illegible] Somerville's trick plays went for naught. The forward pass was tried by both teams and for the most part straight football was played.

Both teams suffered from penalties, English High faring the worst. Once they lost fifteen yards on Edmunds' hurdling and another time the same amount for holding.

Roxbury Storage Salesrooms
WHERE PIANOS ARE SACRIFICED

We Have Stopped Selling Pianos to Piano Trust Dealers

They purposely misrepresent us. We have been willing at times to sell them some of their own makes and treat them as fairly as we do the general public, but in return they have knifed us—purposely sending an innocent buyer to us to ask us for their make of piano, knowing full well that we had just sold them all of their pianos in the Storage Salesrooms at that time and of course could not sell to the person that they sent to us until the next Monday's [illegible]. Then they would say that we did not have any of their pianos. It was a good trick—but a mean one—mean to us who accommodated the Trust Dealer by selling him his own make pianos and mean to the person sent upon such a time wasting and disappointing errand. In the future we will do all we can to prevent any Piano Trust representative from having any piano at the Roxbury Storage Salesrooms. When we sell the general public it's a good ad for us. When we accommodate the unfair Piano Trust Dealer he knifes us. We can truthfully say to you that if you buy a piano at this week's sale you will make a big saving and be happy.

To Keep Up the High Prices on Trust Pianos

When a dozen, two dozen, 50 or 100 Trust Pianos, new or second-hand, get, through force of circumstances, to our storage salesrooms, we put on our sacrifice expense tag, and the piano goes regardless of maker, trust or no trust, to the first man or woman with brains enough to know a good thing when they see it.

WHAT YOU WANT FOR THANKSGIVING!

Whatever may have been intended by our forefathers when they established the custom of Thanksgiving Day, it is now generally observed as a day of feasting and good fellowship.

On Thanksgiving Day families, relatives and friends gather around tables laden with the best the market affords, and find pleasure in eating and drinking as on no other day in the year. Our advertising this week is directed to all those who feel that the Thanksgiving dinner is incomplete without their favorite beverage. We price in this advertisement a sufficient variety to meet all tastes and pocketbooks.

We assure you that the quality of all these goods is exactly as represented, and that all orders will be carefully and promptly filled. We advise, however, that you place your orders EARLY. As usual a bottle of wine goes free with every order, large or small.

THE DOWNFALL OF MAYOR SCHMITZ; A PROMISING CAREER ENDS IN SHAME

FROM San Francisco comes the saddening news that Mayor Eugene E. Schmitz has been indicted by the grand jury.

It is charged against him, and sufficient evidence was presented to the grand jury to procure his indictment, that he induced the police commissioners, who were his own appointees, to withhold from a certain class of French restaurants their liquor licenses. After the licenses were withheld the French restaurant keepers raised a large sum of money and paid upward of $40,000 to A. Ruef, who was the attorney and friend of Eugene Schmitz. Thereupon, Schmitz instructed his appointees, the police commissioners, to grant licenses to the French restaurants.

The licenses were granted and the French restaurants continued to do business as they had previously done it, in defiance of decency and morality.

The career of Eugene Schmitz, as Mayor of San Francisco, is one of the most unfortunate it is possible to contemplate. A man of splendid appearance, a native son of the Golden State, a musician of no mean skill, he was elected to the mayoralty over four years ago under circumstances that made him a national figure.

Rose to Prominence and Office After Great Strike in Frisco

There had been a great strike in San Francisco. The city was divided into two classes, the members of the Employers' Association on the one side and the labor unions on the other. During the strike it was charged that the then Mayor of San Francisco had permitted the police force to be used in an improper way and had sworn in as special policemen a large number of ex-convicts, thugs and murderers.

The Union Labor party, an organization composed of delegates from the various labor unions, nominated Eugene E. Schmitz for Mayor, and after the fullest discussion he was elected by a vote nearly as great as that of his two opponents. He pledged himself to an honest administration of the law and to an equal consideration of all classes and conditions of people. He pledged himself to the purchase and operation of municipal railways, and he pledged himself to fight vigorously against the encroachments of corporations on public streets.

An issue at the time was whether or not the overhead trolley should be operated on the principal streets of the city. All classes of citizens were opposed to the defacement of Market street by the overhead trolley, and Mayor Schmitz was particularly vehement in declaring that not only would he keep trolleys off the principal streets, but would curtail the use on all streets as soon as franchises expired.

Made Good Record During First Term as an Honest Man

During his first term he made an excellent record. As a representative honest man from the ranks of the plain people, he made the hearts of the plain people glad by doing things he should do and leaving undone the things that ought not to be done.

He strengthened the school department by the appointment of some really capable directors. He got rid of a dishonest chief of police and put in his place a fairly efficient man. He appointed a board of works that prevented corporate encroachment on the public streets, and at the end of his term he appealed to the people for re-election.

His old enemies of the Employers' Association had watched his administration, had seen that he was doing right, and they rallied to his standard. He was triumphantly re-elected by a large majority, and more than ever was a remarkable and growing figure in the public eye.

He loomed large as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. He was spoken of for United States Senator, and, though barely forty years of age, he stood in line for any political honors it was in the power of his city or State to give. The best men in the community—poor and rich alike—spoke well of him.

But, unfortunately, Mayor Schmitz, when he became important to the corporations, was tempted by them. An honest, clean man in every relation of life until he had achieved political success, he seemed to waver when the corporation corrupters approached him.

In his first term there had been some criticism on account of his friendly relations with A. Ruef, who was regarded as a dishonest politician. To all who criticized him he said he was under obligations to Ruef for material assistance, but that he realized Ruef was exacting more from his friendship than he ought to give, and he proposed to cut loose from him as soon as possible.

Baits Held Before Him Too Strong for His Moral Fibre

He might have done so and remained an honest man, but the baits that were dangled before his eyes, social importance, luxurious living and a Republican nomination proved too much for his moral fibre to resist. When he was poor, he would have scorned to consider an improper proposition, but comparative wealth, the blandishments of rich men and corporation corruptionists turned his head completely and he surrendered altogether to evil influences.

During the earthquake and fire he seems to have acted a man's part in a manly way, but when it was over he broke down completely. The United Railways Company wanted trolley franchises on all their lines.

This concession was worth more than $10,000,000. The market price of the securities after it was granted proved that fact. It was charged openly that the corruption fund paid by the United Railways to get permission from the board of supervisors and have it signed by the Mayor was over $700,000, and that is one of the things the grand jury is now investigating. Whether or not Schmitz actually received that money is not yet proved, but the charge of extorting a large sum of money by blackmail from the French restaurant keepers is backed by direct testimony.

The man is fallen and is now disgraced. Nothing can rehabilitate him in the good esteem of his fellow-citizens who once delighted to honor him.

Corporations Have no Pity for Their Tools and Victims

Ruef, the corporation agent, betrayed his friend, and having once betrayed him in a small matter, was able to sell him in a big one. The corporations that for years have had San Francisco by the throat are only too glad to flatter a man who had once opposed them. The United Railways in San Francisco, like the united railways anywhere, when any sort of franchises are wanted, have no more consideration for the victim they are about to destroy than has the wolf for the lamb who furnishes him a necessary supper. So long as the public streets of American citizens may be turned over to private corporations, by the vote of a Board of Aldermen and a Mayor, so long will aldermen and mayors be corrupted.

It was the same species of corruption that smirched the character of Van Wyck. He couldn't resist the temptation of profiting by his interest in the ice company. It was the same sort of thing that has torn McClellan down from the pedestal on which he stood. Corporation blandishment, patting on the back by big corporation managers and lawyers, a few smiles from men like "Divine Right" Baer and from such men as Harriman, who by their toadies are said to live in a higher sphere into which the common people may not enter, seem to be the most convincing arguments to debauch the honesty and decency of a certain type of [illegible]

DEFEAT OF BUTTRICK AIDS OVERTIME BILL

With Senator Chapple Slated for Senate Presidency, Mill Workers' Victory Is Assured.

Allan G. Buttrick.

The defeat of Senator Allan G. Buttrick for president of the Massachusetts Senate removes the last obstacle to the passage of Overtime Bill for which the BOSTON AMERICAN has made such a successful battle.

The assurance that Senator William D. Chapple is to be the presiding officer means a friend of that measure in the chair, and it also means that Senator Buttrick will no longer be Senate chairman of the labor committee.

The agitation of the BOSTON AMERICAN to prevent women and children from working in the mills at hours when stockholders are at home cutting dividend coupons has succeeded in landing a Senate that will pass the measure, and there will be no more reconsiderations after it has passed, nor any more judges created as a result of efforts to defeat the measure.

Only Five Republicans Returned.

The Senate stands twenty-eight Republicans and twelve Democrats, and of these Republicans only five are returned—Buttrick, Sterns, Dean, Taft and Prouty.

The Overtime Bill has been a source of great trouble to the Republican party and they are now anxious to get rid of it, although under obligations to the Arkwright Club and the corporations to defeat it. The measure cost them the Governorship once, and made the Lieutenant-Governorship so close on two occasions that it set the leaders thinking, while it made Governor Guild a lot of trouble because of his appointment of Judge Dana.

Defeat Staggers Republicans.

The defeat of such Senators as Hull, Hilton, Grosvenor and Hunter opened the eyes of the Republican leaders and the election of twelve Democratic Senators fairly staggered them.

The bill will be introduced by a Republican senator, because the leaders want to be able to go on the stump next Fall and say to the people: "We did it." The Democrats will not let the Republicans steal all the credit for doing the right thing by the women and children, and one of the Democratic senators will also introduce a bill and urge its passage.

The Republican leaders feel much relieved that they have been able to sidetrack Senator Buttrick's ambition to preside, although the Arkwright Club members class this act as ingratitude.

Arkwright Club Ally of Trusts.

The Arkwright Club finds a sympathetic response in the many corporations who are looking for favors of the coming Legislature, and while it is powerless to defeat the Overtime Bill, it does insist that the graft committees shall be so framed that the common people will not get a look in.

SEN. WILLIAM D. CHAPPLE

Senator Chapple was in town yesterday and met many of the Senators, with the result that he has fourteen pledged to his candidacy for president and expects two more, which will give him a maority.

NEEDHAM CITIZENS DEMAND BETTER TRAIN SERVICE.

Changing Car Nuisance and Excessive Fare Grievances Which Have Been Presented to New Haven Management

Needham people are awaiting an answer through a committee of ten from the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad on their request for "through" service to Boston.

It may be hard for people in other towns and in the cities to understand just how comes it that this place of 5,000 citizens has borne with the railroad, but the fact is that although only thirteen miles from the Hub, Needhamites in 1906 are still "changing" cars at Needham Junction whenever they go to town and when they come back again. Hundreds of them make the round trip every working day in the year.

Other Causes of Complaint.

Needham has other causes for complaint against the railroad, but all of them pale into insignificance beside this "change cars nuisance. The committee which has the matter in hand is made up of Otis E. Dunham, J. B. Walker, John F. Moore, Charles H. Crowley, Albert H. Bagloe, Edmund G. Pond, William P. Bailey, William Carter, Harry Woodward and alter Hewett. Besides a through train service, these representatives of Needham will ask for lower rates on commutation tickets and an additional train to arrive in Boston at about 8:20 o'clock every morning.

Wants Lower Fares.

The new Needham-West Roxbury branch of the New York, New Haven & Hartford has not turned out the success that was looked for. Formerly, Needham passengers could connect at Newton Highlands with Boston & Albany trains.

Now, they have to patronize the New Haven exclusively. The rate for a twenty-five trip ticket is $4. Needham wants it cut down 25 per cent.

MORAN FRIENDS SEE USE OF CUTLERY IN BOSTON VOTE

Mayor's "Guess" of 20,000 Margin, Then 30,000, Now Down to Real Figures of 13,528. Democratic Vote Shy.

Mayor Fitzgerald's kaleidoscope guessing on the Boston vote for Governor, varying from 20,000 up to 30,000, has now got down to real figures and Moran's plurality is only 13,528, which makes the District Attorney feel that there must have been a great demand for cutlery on election day.

When the Mayor said over 20,000, and then put 10,000 on top of it, everybody expected at least the 20,000 figure would hold good. Even President McClellan of the Democratic City Committee took a shy at the 20,000 plurality figure and would not go up or down in his calculations.

The official figures do not reach the Mayor's estimates or that of President McClellan, and District-Attorney Moran is wondering why.

The straight Democratic vote for Moran was only 34,119 which is the lowest since 1900, when Robert Treat Paine received 38,696. From 1895 to 1900 the Democracy of the city and State was going through troublous times so that in 1896, 1897 and 1898 the Republican candidates for Governor carried Boston.

The Boston Democracy began to assert itself in 1900 when it gave Paine a plurality of 3,099 and since that time the Democratic pluralities have been as follows: 1901—Quincy, 8,610; 1902—Gaston, 13,539; 1903—Gaston, 18,869; 1904—Douglas, 33,078; 1905—Bartlett, 17,435.

Governor Guild had 3,034 more votes than Moran on the straight Democratic vote in Boston, and had it not been for the Prohibition and Independence League, Moran's plurality would have not been so great.

District Attorney Moran is a good observer of figures as well as facts and he fails to see where there are any medals due Mayor Fitzgerald or President McClellan for the Boston vote.

In Ward 21, which is bossed by Harry Nawn of the Boston Elevated, Moran received 1,127 votes as against 2,914 for Guild. Last year Bartlett received 1,905 and Governor Guild 2,321. The same condition of affairs prevailed in John H. Lee's Ward 25.

DEMOCRATS TO HAVE RECOUNT IN 17 WARDS; REPUBLICANS IN TWO

The Democrats have asked for a recount of the vote cast in the city primaries of Thursday in seventeen wards, and the Republicans in but two. The time for filing recount petitions with the election commissioners expired last night at 5 o'clock, and the recount will commence to-morrow morning at 9.30 in Faneuil Hall. In Ward 20, on the Democratic end, there is a tie for third place on the council ticket between P. J. Callahan and P. J. Slane, Jr., each receiving 825 votes, while in several wards the vote on ward committe is close.

The Republicans ask for a recount of the ward committee and common council vote in Ward 1, and in Ward 18 for the vote for alderman and ward committee. The Democratic vote asked to be recounted is as follows:

Ward 2, Common Council; Ward 3, Alderman, Common Council, city convention and ward committee; Ward 6, Common Council; Ward 7, ward committee and Common Council; Ward 10, ward committee, city convention and Common Council; Ward 13, Aldermen, Common Council, city convention and ward committee; Ward 15, Aldermen and Common Council; Ward 16, Aldermen; Ward 17, Alderman, city convention and ward committee; Ward 18, Alderman, city convention and Common Council; Ward 19, ward committee; Ward 20, Aldermen and Common Council; Ward 21, Alderman; Ward 22, Councilmen; Ward 24, Aldermen, and Ward 25, Councilmen.

TWO CLERGYMEN IN LEGISLATURE; FIRST IN 3 YEARS

It is three years since the Massachusetts Legislature has had a clergyman as a member, Representative F. O. MacCartney of Rockland, a Socialist, being the last one.

This year two ministers were elected to serve in next year's House, Rev. Melvin S. Nash of Hanover, and Rev. Charles T. Holt of Springfield.

They are both Republicans, and as a State House wag put it: "They are the right men in the right place, for while they will try to keep the Republicans good they can pray for the wicked Democrats."

RAISE FUND TO BUY GOV. CLAFLIN ESTATE

The Newton citizens committee appointed last Spring to raise money for the purchase of the late ex-Governor Claflin estate, reported at a mass meeting held last night in Temple Hall, Newtonville, that they had succeeded in raising $40,000 and that a balance of $18,000 was needed. The committee suggested that when the estate is purchased it be turned into a public park.

Part of the property, 80,000 square feet, was purchased last Spring by the city and turned into a play field for the high school.

PROVIDENCE FIREBUG FOILED FOURTH TIME

Providence, R. I., Nov. 17.—The fourth attempt of firebugs to start a conflagration in this city within a week was discovered to-day in time to prevent the destruction of the big plant of the Pocasset Ice Company at Silver Lake, where an incendiary blaze was started in a pile of lumber.

Choosing a time when all the employes were at a distant part of the premises the firebug entered the middle pocket of the big 8,000-ton plant and did his work. A passing workman heard the crackle of flames and an alarm was rung in in time to save the plant.

Mrs. Cora B. Miller Makes a Fortune

Says She will Now Give Away $10,00 Worth of Medicine to Women.

Until a few years ago Mrs. Cora B. Miller lived in a manner similar to that of thousands of other very poor women of the average small town and village. She now resides in her own palatial brown-stone residence, and is considered one of the most successful business women in the United States.

Several years ago Mrs. Miller learned of a mild and simple preparation that would readily cure female diseases and piles. After curing herself and many of her friends she was besieged by so many women needing the treatment that she decided to furnish it to those who might call for it. She started with only a few dollars' capital, and the remedy, possessing true and wonderful merit, producing marvelous cures when doctors and other remedies failed, the demand grew so rapidly she was several times compelled to seek larger quarters. She now occupies one of the city's largest office buildings, which she owns, and almost one hundred clerks and stenographers are required to assist in this great business.

Million Women Use It.

More than a million women have used Mrs. Miller's Specific, and no matter where you live, she can refer you to ladies in your own locality who can and will tell any sufferer that this marvelous remedy really cures women's diseases. Despite the fact that Mrs. Miller's business is very extensive, she is always willing to give aid and advice to every suffering woman who writes to her. She is a generous, good woman and has decided to give away to women who have never used her medicine $10,000.00 worth absolutely FREE.

Every woman suffering with leucorrhoea or whitish discharges, ulcerations, displacements or falling of the womb, profuse, scanty or painful periods, uterine or ovarian tumors or growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing-down feelings, nervousness, creeping feelings up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, or piles from any cause, should sit right down and send her name and address to Mrs. Cora B. Miller, Box 2415, Kokomo, Ind., and receive by mail (free of charge in plain wrapper) a 50-cent box of her marvelous Specific; also her valuable book.

Remember, this offer will not last long, for thousands and thousands of women who are suffering will take advantage of this generous means of getting cured. So if you are ailing, do not suffer another day, but send your name and address to Mrs. Miller for the book and medicine before the $10,000.00 worth is all gone.

SUNDAY SALES,	2,093,000 copies
WEEK-DAY MORNING SALES,	685,000 copies
WEEK-DAY EVENING SALES,	1,480,000 copies

Figuring on the accepted basis of 5 people dependent on every wage-earner.

In and around the big cities, mind you:—

Those 10,000,000 people spend as much money as all the rest of the population of the United States. Maybe that never struck you before, but it's as sure as the census! That's much too many people to be included in any one "class." And if anything on top of the earth has ever been proved by results it is that the Hearst newspapers are the only papers that go into the hands and homes of all classes in those big cities.

Jot down the cost of a campaign of advertising in the Hearst papers. Now multiply by four. And still you absolutely cannot reach those same 10,000,000 people. Send for our representative and see if he can back up these claims—costs you nothing but a little time.
